Environment Day

Our world is not reusable nor can it be made per ishable. As the plastic tide spins out of control World Environment Day, being observed this year with a focus on plastic pollution, is a requisite to stem it. An alarming level of plastic — 8m to 10m tonnes — spills into the oceans each year, becoming a devastating rogue wave for the ecosystem. Take the North Pacific Ocean where a mass of litter comprising common trash, belongings and fishing equipment is known as the Great Pacific Garbage Patch. There isn't much comfort for life above water either: UNEP sounded the alarm last month when it stated that, considering the invisible "microplastic fragments" plaguing the highest peaks and the ocean floors, single-use plastics and disposable consumption must drop to half as the next few years are precarious. These were identified in "blood, breast milk and placentae" — foreboding signs of a noxious marine and animal feed and food chain. The report also pronounced plastic as the source of 19pc of global greenhouse emissions by 2040; it presented a 'reuse, recycle and diversify' approach for used materials to meet the diminution target.

The same month, climate ministers at the G7 summit vowed to halt surplus plastic pollution in their nations by 2040. However, the most significant development that can set the path to recovery was in Paris — some 200 countries came together and assented to negotiate an international treaty which plugs the plastic crunch similar to the Paris Agreement on climate change. The charge of mapping an agenda to lessen global plastic excess fell squarely on the shoulders of UN affiliates. Likely to be settled by the end of 2024, the accord should translate into a powerful, stringent plastic policy with legal teeth resolute on restoring the globe. Closer to home, Bangladesh and Afghanistan have banned single-use plastic fare. But Pakistan and India's undertaking to phase out expendable plastic has Pakistan's pollution laws — Section 11 of PEPA forbids the discharge of effluents, waste and air pollutants — are met with oblivion. And resistance from retailers and consumers defeated the government's SRO to ban plastic bags in 2020. In April, the climate change ministry disclosed that the production level of plastic waste was 3m tonnes and, according to UNEP, only 3pc is recycled. If unaddressed, this will stand at 12m tonnes by 2040. A World Bank survey in 2022 claimed 10,000 tonnes of macro-plastics flow through the Indus into the sea annually. Meanwhile, untreated sewage and solid refuse continue to ravage Karachi's marine ecology. The fatal threat of toxic plastic, which makes flora, fauna and humans sick, must emerge as a rebel yell for environmentalists and media. Also, without a habit revolution, a plastic ban is just the tip of a rapidly dissolving iceberg

Ease the pain

Muna Khan

Is there a more dismissive response to pain than hearing someone tell you it's all in your head?' As someone who has suffered chronic pain for at least a decade, I can't tell vou how upsetting it is.

I've often felt dismissed by doctors treating my pain from a limited perspective, ie looking at the painful part and not the whole body. A few healthcare professionals have told me how they're seeing more patients with complaints similar to mine, especially since Covid, but can't explain why. I think it's pretty clear that stress levels amplified during the pandemic haven't receded.

I've tried just about every pain relief method shared by friends and family — from myofascial massages to acupuncture to physical therapy, osteopathy, cupping to hypnosis, even sound healmicrodosing. Each provided various levels of temporary relief. I know stress aggravates pain but if any reader has a tip on how they manage stress that doesn't involve leaving the country or switching off the news, let me

So it was with some trepidation that I read Rachel Zoffness' Pain Management Workbook after hearing her on a podcast. While her book does not provide magic cures, nor has it changed my life, it has shifted my attitude.

Her basic premise is that the causes of pain are a mix of biological, psychological and sociological factors. Treating lower back pain in isolation, for long-term relief; one's emotional health has to be taken into consideration. How a person views their own pain is of equal import. The section on pain dial — imagining your pain as a volume button — and how to control it, was particularly useful. 'Any time your brain perceives or beli-eves that your body is in danger, the pain dial is turned up, so pain volume is loud loud enough to grab your attention, change your behaviour, and get you out of harm's way. However, if your brain determines that your body is safe, the dial is turned down — so pain volume is lower, and warning sig-nals are quieter," she

When your body is stressed, it tenses and tightens and "cerebral cortex and limbic system (which control thoughts and feelings) send signals to your pain dial, turning it way up", she adds. The same is true when your mood is low or you have negative thoughts or when your attention is focused on pain.

In the good news though, the opposite is also true. When your ing. I also tried psychedelic stress is low, you are happy, your mood is high, your brain determines "little protection is needed", turning pain volume low.

Thoughts, beliefs, emotions, perceptions, coping behaviours, and ontext can adjust pain volume," she writes.

The trick then is to focus on keeping the pain volume low, and she suggests many activity-based things — from being outdoors, to more socialising and reduced screen time. I can attest to how this has helped me tremendously in pain management but they are difficult goals, especially when everyone you know shares your anxiety about the uncertainty in the example, won't provide the dial lower when you worry about a near economic collapse that awaits, the tensions in families for opposing political views, the lack of opportunities for the youth and so forth? While Dr Zoffness does not have an answer specific to the pain Pakistanis are afflicted with neither, it seems, does the PDM government — she says having a dee-per understanding of the science behind pain, and coping behaviours, allows one a greater control of their pain. She explains cognitive behavio-ur therapy and their pain dials.

Perhaps the most useful part of the book is the tools she offers, like the school exercise book where you fill in the blanks to questions that will give you insight into your emotional state and help you recalibrate your relationship to pain. It may seem simplistic but putting things down on paper, like how you react to certain situations, can be very useful, even cathartic, maybe surprising. Seeing those words on paper helped me make lifestyle changes. I spend 10 minutes in direct sunlight upon waking to manage circadian rhythms in a bid to help improve sleep hygiene. Pain is debilitating. It can lead to isolation and reduced activities; it can impact your work and all vour relationships. I especially chose to write this piece given the situation in Pakistan, a nation in perpetual crisis mode, because the environment impacts mood and the body. Many may not understand how pain is the body's warning Zoffness' action focused book offers useful techniques and tips without sounding new age-y. More importantly, it offers hope that life without chronic pain is possible provided you're willing to do the work. -

It's an ant's life

Zarrar Khuhro

There are some clips that go viral time and again, because they're absolutely incredible. One such clip on social media feeds is from a 2006 documentary named Ants! Nature's secret power in which scientists discovered a massive abandoned ant city somewhere in Brazil and proceeded to pump it full of 10 tons of cement over three days so that they could take a look at its inner working.

The ant megapolis, which had been created by leafcutter ants by displacing over 40 tons of dirt was a masterpiece in construction which covered an area of 46 square met-res and reached about 8m below the surface. Dubbed the "ant equivalent of the Great Wall of China", this megacity conta-i-ned subterranean highways linking the main chambers with 'side roads' connecting the highways. The ant city comes complete with dedicated fungus gardens where the ants grew their own food and separate re-fuse pits to avoid disease and contamina-The design was so intelligent that it emerged that the entire colony, its chambers and routes were built in the most effici-ent and sustainable way possible: minimising commute time and maximising ventilation to keep its residents cool and healthy. It was a more sustainable design than most aboveground cities we live in. As per the documentary's narrator: "Everyth-ing looks like it has been designed by an architect with a single mind ... the defined as a "group of utilising a process of imsynergetically interacting organisms of the same species", or, simply put, a group of organisms acting in concert to fulfil the will/ meet the needs of the collective. Apart from ants. bees and termites are also examples of superorganisms, as are some fungal networks. Recently, the shocking discovery was made that in the mouths of those afflicted with severe tooth decay, microbes and fungi can combine into a superorganism that can then sprout 'limbs' allowing it to 'walk' and 'leap' over teeth surfaces — an ability that the indithe sum is truly greater than its parts. The concept of superorganisms has also helped scientists better understand the human biome, in particular the complex and still little understood way in which microbes and bacteria within our body interact. The field of cybernetics, working on the concept of 'distributed intelligence', has also found interesting applications for this concept in yet another example of man learning from nature.

vidual organisms do not have, thus proving that

And there's a lot to learn, especially in the field of architecture; the way that insects like termites use collective, distributed intelligence to collaborate to build enduring, sustainable structures has inspired scientists at Harvard to work on developing an army of bug bots of their own. Dubbed TERMES, this miniature automated team of robots works together to build castles, pyramids and towers out of foam blocks without any supervision, even constructing staircases when they need to reach a higher level, and responding to unexpected changes in the structure or the environment spon- an IED attack and keep taneously without any chugging away. -- Courcollective will of the ant need to 'talk' to one an-colony, the superorgan- other - exactly how bees, ism." A superorganism is ants and termites work by plicit communication known as 'stigmergy'. This means that, unlike systems where swarms of robots need a central operator giving them instructions, these robots can work more or less independently and can pick up where one leaves off. The scient-ists hope to use this model to one day have the robots construct emergency housing in remote/ disaster-stricken areas, placing sa-n-dbags where floods are expected, or even to perform simple construction tasks on the moon or on Mars

But before we get ahead of ourselves, it's instructive to study how insects instinctively come un with efficient designs, and then to apply those principles to human design. Take spider webs, the design of which parallel the way humans construct suspension and cable-stay bridges. The way that spider webs can catch flies travelling at high speeds without breaking can benefit the designers of aircraft carriers aiming to secure planes landing at high speeds. Termite mounds have also inspired architects, with the Eastgate center in Zimbabwe mimicking the cooling techniques employed in termite mounds, using air pockets that drive natural ventilation, thus cooling the building with outside air. Considered the first building to use natural ventilation on this scale, the Eastgate Centre consumes a fraction of the energy that other buildings of this size do. Then there's the honeycomb, perhaps nature's most efficient design, which is being incorporated into products like bicycle helmets and car bumpers. In fact, the latest tyres for US military vehicles are based on the honeycomb design and are capable of surviving tesy Dawn

Seminar on 'Heart Health held at Iqra University on World Hypertension Day

KARACHI (APP): Iqra University's North Campus organized a seminar on the importance of heart health, focusing on World Hypertension Day' under the auspices of the Pakistan Hypertension League.

The seminar aimed to raise awareness about the adverse effects of hvtinguished cardiologist, Secretary-General of the Pakistan Hypertension League Professor Dr. Abdul Rashid Khan expressing his thoughts on the hypertensive complications, which greatly enlightened the audience, said a statement on

Two robbers netted

KARACHI (APP): Pakistan Rangers Sindh and Police in a joint intelligencebased operation in the Orangi Town area arrested two of a robbers' gang and recovered illegal arms and ammunition from their possession.

According to a news release on Monday, the arrested were identified as Ameer Nawab and Yousuf alias Raja.

The arrested accused revealed that they along with their other accomplices committed more than 70 robberies in Orangi Town, Nazimabad, SITE Area and other areas during which they snatched 150 mobile phones and cash Rs. 0.2 million. Raids were being conducted to arrest their other accom-

Arrested along with recovered arms and ammunition were handed over to the police for further legal proceedings.

13th Sartyoon Sang Crafts exhibition inaugurated

KARACHI (APP): Provin- nities and voiced her expeccial Secretary for Social Welfare, Dr Sheeren Mustafa Narejo on Monday inaugurated the four day 13th SRSO Sartyoon Sang Crafts' exhibition at a shopping mall, here.

Chief Executive Officer (CEO) SRSO, Muhammad Dittal Kalhoro Rural Women Artisans and others were present, said a statement on Monday.

The four-day exhibition is organized by the Sindh Rural Support Organization (SRSO) with the collaboration of the Sindh government and its partners displaying the work of thousands of women artisans of Sindh with an aim to provide market linkages to rural women and artisans. She appreciated the endeavours of Sindh Rural poor and destitute commutation of the continuation of such support for rural communities of Sindh.

She purchased wares from artisan women who came from remote villages in different districts of the province and appreciated their work. The first day of the exhibition received an overwhelming response from local and international visitors. Appreciating the exhibition, Secretary SW Sindh said arranging such activity to promote artisans, handicrafts and Sindh's culture was a great effort being made by the SRSO.

The Craft Exhibition is being organized by SRSO for the last twelve years with the motive to support ethical fashion and to promote the crafts of some of Support Organizations for the most marginalized women in the province.
