Farewell address at National Assembly

Pakistan to be made economically stable via joint efforts, says PM

Thanks who's who of political parties for support, guidance; Terms tenure 'most difficult test of life'; Lauds coalition partners for showing maturity & sincerity for bringing economic stability

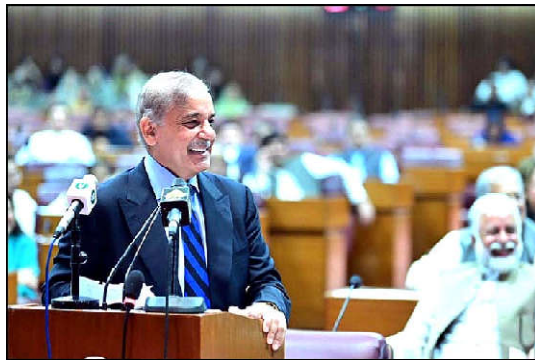

ISLAMABAD (APP): Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif on Wednesday, in his farewell address to the National Assembly, expressed heartfelt gratitude to a diverse array of political parties, underscoring their pivotal support and guidance during the challenging term of 16 months. Just hours before sending advice to President Dr Arif Alvi for the dissolution of the National Assembly, the prime minister told the House that the 16-month tenure was the shortest ever period for a government particularly when compared to the plethora of issues inherited from the previous regime.

He said besides other unsuitable conditions, the coalition government also had to face other massive challenges like the worst floods and the signing of the IMF (International Monetary Fund) deal which was breached by the previous government to hurt national integrity.

He said through his poor conduct and episodes like the "cipher drama" the previous government undermined foreign relations, including with the United States, besides carrying out defamatory propaganda against political opponents.

"This is the painful story of the previous government's four years... During our 16 months, the incumbent government did not victimise anyone. Today, if a party leader has been punished, we are in no way happy over that. One should have the fear of Allah. There is no question of distribution of sweets (to rejoice the punishment)," he remarked. Reiterating the condemnation of the May 9 arson, the prime minister said it would be remembered as the Black Day in history as it marked the "worst conspiracy" against the state of Pakistan, the

that he would send the advice for National Assembly's dissolution on Wednesday night. He said that he would meet Opposition Leader Raja Riaz to hold a consultation to finalise the name of the interim prime minister.

"These 16 months were the toughest trial of my life during my 38 years of political career when the country was faced with inflation, skyrocketing oil prices, and political turmoil. Who will invest when there will be threats for long marches?" he questioned.

He said with the signing of IMF agreement, the risk for default had ebbed away, despite the evil designs of those who tried to sabotage the process.

No meaningful engagement with India unless revocation of illegal, unilateral steps on IIOJK: FM

ISLAMABAD (APP): Foreign Minister Bilawal Bhutto Zardari on Wednesday reiterated that Pakistan's stance on its relations with India was very clear and consistent, unless it revoked its illegal and unilateral acts of 2019 over the Indian Illegally Occupied Jammu and Kashmir (IIOJK), there was no space to meaningful engagement.

He said that India had not only violated the international laws and the United Nations Security Council resolutions, but also the bilateral agreements between the two countries.

"There is no space left for Pakistan to meaningfully engage with India," the foreign minister maintained while addressing a presser to highlight the achievements of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs during his tenure.

The foreign minister, replying to a query, said that he went to Goa, India to attend the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO) meeting despite serious reservations and carrying head money, to present Pakistan's stance and tried to utilize the space available to pronounce Pakistan's interests.

He said due to his participation in the SCO meeting where he presented Pakistan's stance clearly, India went on the back foot and held the SCO heads of states summit virtually.

About sending Pakistan national team to contest the ICC Cricket World Cup in India, he said contrary to India's indulgence in immature acts, Pakistan always maintained that there should be a difference between politics and sports, adding that they still had security concerns as the security of the national team could not be compromised; and they had conveyed such to the International Cricket Council (ICC) and India.

The foreign minister, to another question, said that Pakistan was not interested in the bloc poli-

PEMRA amendment bill sails through Senate, NA

Thorough consultations held with all stakeholders during preparation of PEMRA Amendment Bill: Marriyum

ISLAMABAD (APP): The Senate and the National Assembly on Wednesday approved the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority (Amendment) Bill, 2023, which was retracted by the federal government earlier this week, with a majority vote.

Minister of Information and Broadcasting, Marriyum Aurangzeb proposed the bill and highlighted her role in initiating the process to amend the PEMRA Ordinance, which involved a year-long consultation and the incorporation of three important clauses.

According to Marriyum Aurangzeb, the 2023 PEMRA Bill safeguards the rights of media workers and journalists. This is because the bill mandates all media house owners to settle their outstanding dues, including salaries, within a two-month timeframe.

Marriyum Aurangzeb conveyed that the Parliament now holds the authority to appoint the PEMRA

Chairman. This proposal swiftly garnered endorsement from the Prime Minister during the committee meeting. Additionally, she contrasted the earlier PEMRA Ordinance of 2002, wherein the Chairman of PEMRA held significant authority over channels, suspensions, licenses, and program suspensions. In comparison, the present bill reallocated this power, empowering the Council of Authority and incorporating a mechanism for appeals from those who feel aggrieved.

Rubaba Buledi says BA passes 96 bills, approves 196 resolutions during five year parliamentary period

QUETTA (APP): Parliamentary secretary law and parliamentary affairs Dr. Rubaba Khan Buledi said in the last five-year parliamentary period of Balochistan, as many as 96 bills were passed, 196 resolutions were approved, 521 questions were disposed of, 87 attention notices and 36 adjournment motions were presented. Despite the change of government, the assembly business continued according to the constitution, playing an active role in the overall situation.

She expressed these views while addressing a ceremony held to award excellent performance certificates to various social workers and organizations in the committee room of Balochistan Assembly on Wednesday.

THANK YOU PRIME MINISTER SHEHBAZ SHARIF, INFORMATION MINISTER MARRIYUM AURANGZEB AND LAW MINISTER AZAM NAZEER TARAR

FOR LISTENING TO AND ACCEPTING THE DEMANDS OF MEDIA BODIES.

The PEMRA amendment act 2023 was a result of collective discussions between AEMEND, CPNE, PFUJ, PBA, APNS and MOI. The bill is a step in the right direction. The bill has resolved some of the longstanding issues of electronic media workers and the broadcast industry. For instance to alleviate media workers salary delays, government advertisements have now become conditional upon workers getting their dues paid on time. All media organizations agreed to these changes.

At the same time in this bill the Government has voluntarily given up its right to appoint The Chairman of PEMRA and now Chairman PEMRA will be appointed by the Parliament, this is a step to make PEMRA more independent. To address fake news, Broadcasters, Journalists and the Government have agreed to a definition and changes in the law to discourage it.

More consensus building initiatives like these are required to make media laws better in the country where freedom of speech has been curbed by successive governments. But this bill is a step in the right direction.

We thank Honorable Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif for encouraging Information Minister Marriyum Aurangzeb for facilitating industry stakeholders to agree on these changes.

Daily Voice of Masses Independent

Old politics

Bilawal Bhutto-Zardari's farewell address to the National Assembly after his first stint as an elected representative has given voice to the feelings of general despair being felt by the silenced masses, but also invited renewed criticism of the 'dynastic' style of politics espoused by certain democratic parties. Addressing his father, PPP co-chairman Asif Ali Zardari, and the PML-N supremo, Nawaz Sharif, Mr Bhutto-Zardari expressed regret at the way Pakistani politics continues to be conducted, complaining that the two 'senior politicians' may have condemned the new lot to suffer for the next 30 years what they had suffered over the past three decades.

He seemed to be speaking with reference to the events of these past few weeks, which have seen parliament reduced to a rubber stamp for a seemingly endless stream of bad legislation, as well as the start of a new cycle of political victimisation that culminated with the incarceration of the PTI chief.

Though it was a smaller excerpt of his speech that ignited heated debate on social media, Mr Bhutto-Zardari's remarks, in general, were otherwise praiseworthy for their astuteness. He spoke of the need for dialogue and a new charter of democracy; for institutions to function within their domains; for the rules of the game to be defined; and for the powerful to not continue to ignore the needs of two-thirds of the population, which comprises people below the age of 30.

The PPP chairman was also candid in admitting that although the outgoing government may have seized power last April through a constitutional manoeuvre, it failed to keep institutions within their constitutional domains over the next 16 months.

Such clarity of thought in the upcoming generation of political leaders would give one hope that all is not lost. But, and perhaps rightly so, many were left outraged when he beseeched Messrs Zardari and Sharif to "make politics easier for me and Maryam Sharif".

He may have been addressing the two seniors as a child might their parents, possibly for some added pathos, but it seems Mr Bhutto-Zardari hasn't fully read the nation's mood. At a time when faith in the democratic system is rapidly evaporating, and the people have been left disenfranchised, the suggestion that political power is an inheritance to be shared between the Sharifs and Zardaris was bound to raise hackles.

There is no dearth of able, forward-looking politicians in Pakistan, and it must be unacceptable to any democratically inclined person that their chances of being chief executive should be automatically limited by an accident of birth.

It may well be that the scions of our political dynasties are capable politicians in their own right, but 'level playing fields' cannot just be for contests between a handful of families.

Electoral fantasy

Mahir Ali

Will the dissolution of the National Assembly and provincial assemblies be accompanied by the announcement of an election date? There has been considerable speculation of late around the controversial new census and its electoral implications, much of it suggesting that the voting ritual is very likely to be delayed for some months beyond the constitutionally ordained 90-day time frame.

The composition of the caretaker government that will 'rule' Pakistan in the interim has also been a tightly guarded secret. Arguably, the bigger question is whether any of this matters. An American witicism from decades ago, long before there were memes, went something like: it doesn't matter who you vote for, the government always gets in.

In the Pakistani context, that sense — and the dominance of the two family firms masquerading as political parties — partially helped propel Imran Khan to the fore as a possible alternative, with substantial military assistance. The help he required to cobble together a parliamentary majority after his party gained less than a third of the popular vote in 2018 was readily provided. And when it was withdrawn last year, the coalition inevitably crumbled. During his truncated tenure as prime minister, he frequently boasted of being 'on the same page' as the military hierarchy, but was apparently taken aback when straying offscript entailed being ruthlessly cut down to size. But then, one of the biggest problems with Imran Khan is that he seems to assume everything is about him, conveniently overlooking the fact that his promise of a 'naya Pakistan' came to naught, because it turned out to have no substance.

His fairly abysmal record in government does not measure up to his self-ordained status as an outstanding democrat. And it's absolutely no good, in the aftermath, to blame almost everything that went wrong — the reinforced repression that stretched from political opponents to freedom of expression — on the uniformed elite with which he willfully collaborated. In recent interviews with foreign media outlets — after a ban was surreptitiously imposed on his engagement with the local variant — he continued to spout a great deal of nonsense, much of which went unchallenged. It's not incorrect to describe Nawaz Sharif's political incarnation as a military-ordained phenomenon under Ziaul Haq's regime, although there's never any mention of the ISI role in forming the IJI coalition with the aim of thwarting the PPP's legitimate claim to power under Benazir Bhutto. Perhaps because it cuts too close to the bone in the case of the PTI.

Similarly, he routinely relates Zulfikar Ali Bhutto's pre-eminence in the Ayub regime to his party's electoral successes in 1970, implying it was a military creation, without ever bothering to point out that ZAB's popularity was closely correlated to his decision to break away from the Ayub dictatorship. Bhutto's subsequent ties with the military are indeed murky, but not subservient.

An even more obvious story that Khan perpetuates is that the arrests of his party's female supporters was "the first time in Pakistan's history" that women have been taken into custody for political reasons. Is he really that ignorant about Pakistan's past? Tellingly, he never mentions the Zia era — and no one ever seems to ask him about his key mentor as a political novice, Gen Hamid Gul.

None of this is intended to suggest that just because political persecution has long been the norm in Pakistan, it is in any way justified in the case of the failed PTI experiment. The imprisonment of a previous prime minister is merely part of a pattern, and this particular prisoner's hypocrisy doesn't necessarily make it more palatable.

The far bigger question in relation to the next elections, whenever they take place, is not who will win or who might be excluded but, rather: what difference will it make? Let's imagine for a mad moment that the PTI were to return to power without a hybrid setup. Can anyone in their right mind imagine that might offer some kind of a solution to Pakistan's political malaise and economic dysfunction? That the alternatives are almost equally dire does not detract from the validity of the query. It may well be that understandable concern about the timing of the election is misplaced. The point is, whenever it is held, and regardless of who is permitted to participate — or, for that matter, favoured over others — how exactly will the future be any different from the abysmal present? Khan recently told Stephen Sackur on BBC's Hard Talk that the "only solution" for Pakistan is "free and fair elections". That phenomenon has not been witnessed since 1970, and it's unlikely to be repeated. But even if it were, given the nature of the leading contenders, where on earth could it possibly lead? -- Courtesy Dawn

The Xiaoping model

Hassan Baig

Pakistan is passing through difficult and unprecedented times. We are facing enormous difficulties with a clear lack of resources, overpopulation, widespread poverty, a huge debt burden, no savings, an uncompetitive industry, abundant raw labour, lack of technology and a political crisis. This was the situation China faced in 1949-1976 (the Maoist period), but then came visionary leader and statesman Deng Xiaoping in 1978, who literally changed everything for good in China. Pakistan needs a leader of the quality and caliber of Xiaoping to transform the country and society.

The architect of modern China is Deng Xiaoping. What he did was a departure from past policies to introduce a new set of indigenous policies most suitable for China, especially introducing business reforms by accommodating the private sector in the development process. He brought a new Chinese economic development model by introducing market-economy reforms that proved to be a great leap forward for China. Pakistan also needs a dynamic visionary leadership like Xiaoping to introduce new economic reforms most suitable for its development, as we see a continuous and perpetual downslide of our economy due to a wrong set of policies and priorities.

China initially targeted four priority sectors — agriculture, industry, defense, science and technology — as part of modernization to improve uplift the economy. Pakistan also needs to initially focus on these sectors to transform and revolutionize its economy. Unlike China in the early 1970s, Pakistan already has a public-private partnership model to develop and grow.

That model must be utilized in a more coherent and consistent way as part of its policy paradigm. That would lay a strong foundation to get robust economic growth to get rid of poverty and the heavy burden of debts and loans. It would also pave the way to enhance exports with a lot of investment in these sectors. Initially, the opportunity can be materialized with the help and support of China (through CPEC) and Middle Eastern countries like Saudi Arabia, UAE and Qatar, which are showing an interest in investing in these sectors. That needs to be capitalized.

First of all, let's take up the issue of agricultural modernization that needs to be prioritized as a step towards corporate farming. The armed forces have already taken up a project to cultivate barren government lands in far-flung areas to convert them for corporate farming. Friendly Middle Eastern countries including Saudi Arabia and the UAE have also expressed an interest in taking up the green project of agriculture farming if they are provided land on certain terms and conditions.

The US-Pak Green Alliance is all-out for supporting agriculture innovation as part of its climate advocacy project. The second phase of CPEC also indicates agriculture as a life-line project for a sustainable Pakistan, providing livelihood for rural communities.

Phase 2 of CPEC has brought a message, as conveyed by China's Vice Premier He Lifeng's recent visit, heralding cooperation in the field of agriculture, rural revitalization and green development. Pakistan can achieve prosperity and development through an inclusive growth model by investing more into the agriculture sector for rural communities.

The message from Chinese President Xi Jinping is a great hope for a sustainable and developed Pakistan through the opportunities provided by CPEC's Phase 2. It is, in fact, poised to provide an immediate opportunity to address the pressing needs of the country, further paving the way to long-term development. The transfer of technology through the second phase of CPEC will go a long way in achieving self-sustainability in the field of modern agriculture farming.

The Chinese economic development model introduced by the great Deng Xiaoping in the late 1970s is, in fact, a great guide for developing countries like Pakistan. But one of the most important factors was a stable political system in China. That provides a conducive atmosphere, facilitating investment for economic development.

A stable political system is important, missing in the case of Pakistan.

A fragile economy cannot afford a politically weak, polarized, and fragmented society, which is detrimental and disastrous for economic growth and development. Pakistan immediately needs to go for elections to put in place a stable political government to achieve the target of high economic growth and development. All the four priority areas and sectors of the economy discussed in this article are important to follow as a first step to achieve the aim of high GDP growth and economic development. -- Courtesy TheNews

Highlighting the importance of producing quality and skilled human resources in achieving national prosperity and development goals, the minister said the incumbent government increased the development budget of the Higher Education Commission (HEC) from Rs26 billion to Rs70 billion, which was almost 135 per cent unprecedented hike. Making a comparison, Ahsan Iqbal said the tertiary education rate in the world stood at around 40 per cent, India at 31 per cent, Bangladesh at 25 per cent and Pakistan, unfortunately, stand at 13 per cent only.

"We have to impart higher education to our youth besides equipping them with technological advancements," he said while declaring the country's 'youth a nuclear asset' in the economic field.

Economic revival: a key area PM Sharif Govt to proud of PESHAWAR (APP): Besides successfully overcoming the monster challenge of floods and improving bilateral relations with countries, the PMLN-led coalition government has been succeeded to bring the economy back on the right track and saving the country from an economic default in its 16-month rule.

Financial and economic experts said that the revival of IMF agreement was a big achievement of the 16-month government of Prime Minister

Muhammad Shehbaz Sharif that has not only saved the country's from bankruptcy and economic default but also restored the confidence of international monetary institutions to invest in Pakistan.

Muhammad Naem, Professor of the Economics Department, University of Swabi said that saving the country from bankruptcy, IMF agreement and Economic Revival Plan (ERP), was one of the key achievements on the economic front of Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif Govt. He said that $3 billion stand-by agreement with International Monetary Fund has helped Pakistan on economic, financial, investment and bilateral fronts and its trickled-down effects started with the rise of rupee value against the dollar and price stability in the open market. He said the economic revival plan was another achievement of the government that envisages capitalizing the country's untapped potential in key sectors of defence production, agricultural, livestock, minerals & mining, IT and energy through indigenous development as well as investments especially from friendly countries. Dr Muhammad Naem said the government has taken a bold step pertaining to establishment of Special Investment Facilitation Council (SIFC) to act as a single window interface for the potential investors and to adopt a unified approach. He said SIFC would shorten hitherto cumbersome and lengthy business processes through a cooperative and collaborative approach with representation of all stakeholders besides creating horizontal-vertical synergy between federation and provinces. He said it would help facilitating timely decision making and avoiding duplication of effort besides ensuring swift projects implementation. Work on CPEC projects were expedited during PMLN led Government and second phase of CPEC was launched which magnified present Govt investment friendly policies.

Syria's Assad blames Turkey's Erdogan for violence in Syria, insists on pullout of Turkish troops

BEIRUT: Syria's President Bashar Assad slammed Turkey in comments published Wednesday, blaming Ankara for the uptick in violence in his war-torn country and insisting on the withdrawal of Turkish forces from Syria.

Assad spoke in an interview with Sky News Arabia, his first interview with a foreign media outlet in months. The interview is to be fully aired later on Wednesday but Sky News Arabia released some excerpts ahead of the broadcast.

Turkey is a main backer of armed opposition fighters who have been trying to remove Assad from power and has carried out three major incursions into northern Syria since 2016. Turkish forces control parts of northern Syria.

Assad, who is backed by Russia and Iran, has managed over the past few years to retake most of the territory with the help of his allies, and turn the tide of war in his favor. Syrian rebels and Turkey-backed opposition forces now only hold a small northwestern corner of Syria, where fighting and violence have persisted.

"Terrorism in Syria is made in Turkey," Assad said. He also denied rumors of an upcoming meeting between him and his Turkish counterpart, Recep Tayyip Erdogan despite meetings between Turkey and Syria's defense and foreign ministers under Russian and Iranian mediation to restore strained ties.

Damascus maintains that Ankara must put forward a timetable for the withdrawal of Turkish troops from Syria in order to normalize relations. In May, the ministers agreed to set up a "roadmap" to improve relations.

"Erdogan's objective in meeting me is to legitimize the Turkish occupation in Syria," Assad said in Wednesday's interview. "Why should I and Erdogan meet? To have soft drinks?"

US vows to keep Syria's chemical weapons program in UN spotlight over Russian & Chinese opposition

Monitoring Desk

UNITED NATIONS: The United States and its allies vowed Tuesday to keep Syria's failure to account for its chemical weapons program in the spotlight at the U.N. Security Council every month despite opposition from Russia and China.

U.S. Ambassador Linda Thomas-Greenfield told the council Syrian President Bashar Assad's government "has repeatedly lied to the international community" and to investigators from the international chemical weapons watchdog, which has confirmed that it used these banned weapons on at least nine occasions.

She said the Biden administration will continue to demand a full accounting from Syria as it pledged after joining the Chemical Weapons Convention in September 2013, when it was pressed by its close ally Russia following a deadly chemical weapons attack in the Damascus suburb of Ghouta, which the West blamed on Damascus.

For the first time, Russia and China refused to speak at the monthly meeting on the Syria chemical weapons issue, saying they are repetitive and should be cut back.

Syria's minister counsellor Alhakan Dandy did speak, saying his country was surprised at this month's meeting "given that there have been no developments that would require it," other than what he called continuous attempts by the United States "to exploit the chemical weapons file to serve their agenda of hostility against Syria."

South Korea says Myanmar arms ban in place after U.N. concern

Monitoring Desk

SEOUL: South Korea said on Wednesday its ban on the sale of arms to Myanmar remained in place even though it had invited an envoy appointed by its military rulers to an event promoting the sale of weapons.

Thomas Andrews, U.N. special rapporteur on human rights in Myanmar, had expressed "extreme concern" that the Myanmar ambassador, Thant Sin, attended the event hosted by South Korea's foreign ministry in May, saying it had legitimised the junta and raised doubts about South Korea's ban.

Myanmar has been in crisis since the military ousted an elected government led by Nobel Peace Prize laureate Aung San Suu Kyi in 2021, with most Western governments isolating the generals and cutting off arms sales but others, including Russia and China, maintaining close relations.

"Our government has been still strictly implementing countermeasures against Myanmar since they were announced shortly after the outbreak of the crisis, including a ban on exports of military supplies, and there is no change in this position," the South Korean ministry said in a statement.

Andrews had said in a letter to South Korea's diplomatic mission in Geneva that the envoy's "participation in the event legitimises an illegal and brutal military junta".

The invitation to Thant Sin also "raises doubts" about South Korea's ban on arms exports to Myanmar and could imply its intention to permit the sale, despite the junta's responsibility for attacks on civilians, Andrews said.

Senate passes resolution demanding timely elections

ISLAMABAD (APP): The Senate on Wednesday passed a unanimous resolution, presented by Senator Mushtaq Ahmed of Jamaat-e-Islami stressing the constitutional mandate for timely elections in the country.

According to the resolution, the Supreme Court of Pakistan reiterated the foundational principles of the state's Constitution and stressed the paramount authority of Allah Almighty over the entire universe.

In a landmark decision, the Court emphasized that the governance of Pakistan operates within the confines of Allah's prescribed limits, with elected representatives serving as custodians of this sacred trust.

The ruling highlighted the meticulous procedural framework outlined in the Constitution for the selection of elected officials, underscoring the necessity for adherence to these guidelines across all government bodies.

The resolution said the Constitution mandates a detailed and mandatory procedure for the election of representatives, which applies to all institutions within Pakistan's administrative structure.

Further reinforcing the democratic values enshrined in the Constitution, the Supreme Court reaffirmed that the tenure of national and provincial assemblies, as outlined in Article 224 of the Constitution, necessitates the timely conduct of elections upon completion of their term. This provision safeguards the integrity of the electoral process and ensures the continuity of representative governance.

The Court's ruling clarified that individuals or entities possess only the authority granted to them by the Constitution or the law, as per Article 4. The supervisory role of the caretaker government established after the dissolution of assemblies, as defined in Article 230 of the Elections Act of 2018, is limited to routine decisions during the interregnum and does not extend to major policy decisions.

The resolution said the Supreme Court underscored that the responsibility for organizing elections within the prescribed timeframe, as stipulated in Article 224, lies squarely with the Election Commission of Pakistan.
