A terrible law

The National Assembly — a forum elected, empowered and entrusted by the nation to safeguard the public interest — has once again capitulated to unelected powers to pass legislation that gravely undermines civil rights.

The amendments to the Official Secrets Act passed by the Lower House on Tuesday read like an autocrat's wish list: sweeping powers to search and detain; to brand anyone an 'enemy' of the state on mere suspicion; to pry into citizens' personal affairs without a court-issued warrant; to freely use force against suspects who resist such intrusions; and to treat anyone as guilty until they are proven

It is deeply troubling that whoever had this law drafted clearly not only felt that such extreme measures were 'appropriate' against citizens of this country, but that they should also be given sanction. Thankfully, the Senate has refused to abdicate its responsibility. Facing stiff opposition from both government and opposition benches, the Senate chairman has referred the NA-passed bill to the relevant Senate committee for further debate.

It is unfortunate that so few legislators are speaking out while Pakistani democracy is being frogmarched into the shambles by their own hands. A law which empowers the state to consider anyone an 'enemy' — even if they have unintentionally interacted with any person or entity deemed to be working against the country — not only runs counter to the established principles of justice, it is dangerous in the hands of a state that routinely brands its own citizens, including elected prime ministers, 'traitors'. Likewise, any law that gives intelligence agencies carte blanche to "enter and search any person or place, without a warrant, and if necessary, by use of force, and seize any document, sketch, or like nature, or anything which is or can be evidence" on the basis of mere suspicion is excessive and will only serve to create a climate of perpetual fear. The same bill also pushes for all materials collected by intelligence agencies during their investigations to be considered admissible as evidence, even when they may not have been collected by legal means. This would include secretly taped conversations or video recordings done without a warrant from a court of law.

Do our lawmakers really want to give intelligence agencies complete impunity to conduct surveillance operations against anyone, which would include themselves, and conveniently justify their intrusive activities later by calling them part of an ongoing investigation?

Even in the worst period of oppression in Pakistan's history, such a brazen attempt to jettison civil liberties would have prompted an outcry from the thinking segments of society. When the implications are this serious, it is critical that this law is debated further — not just in parliament, but by civil society too. The Senate, meanwhile, must do its duty.

Our cloudy future

Every thinking person should watch Christopher Nolan's film Oppenheimer. Tickets are expensive but they are cheaper than ignorance about the implications of our nuclear prowess. The film is a disturbing narrative of the career of J. Robert Oppenheimer, the man who headed the US Manhattan project which developed and detonated the first atomic bomb Trinity' in 1945. Like Alfred Nobel who invented dynamite, Oppenhei-mer suffered postpartum qualms about the demon he spawned: "Death — the Destroyer of Worlds".

The atomic bombs dropped by the US on first Hiroshima and then Nagasaki in 1945 killed or permanently maimed 200,000 hu--m--ans. They were followed between 1945 and 1980 by atmospheric nuclear tests conducted by powerful countries across the globe. The impact has been the direct sil-e--nt cause of cancer in about 2.4 million people.

Nolan spared his audience graphic ima-g--es of the effect of the atom weapons on hu--man beings peeling flesh, blindness, loss of hair, leukemia, incurable tumours. He avoided mention of the irreversible im--pact on the world's atmosphere, contamina-ted water resources and genetic mutations.

The film concentrated instead on the political aftermath following the birth of Oppenheimer's brainchild. Like Frankens-tein's monster, it destroyed its cre-

Since Oppenheimer's whether either country has time, many countries have any strategy for escalation control, for civilian security, or for war termination. Their armed forces may survive long enough to unleash a second strike. Civilians will have but one choice: to be Hiroshima first or Nagasaki second. The 19th Prussian general Carl lau-s--ewitz once said: "Three quarters of the factors on which action in war is based are wrapped in a fog of greater or lesser uncertainty'. A cynical observation, but one pro-ven true by history. Take the invasions of Russia by Napoleon in 1812 and Hitler in 1941, or the incursions into Afghanistan by Russia in 1979 and by the US-led forces in 2001. The fog of uncertainty cleared after those wars were over. Nuclear mushroom clouds,

War in tea leaves

Shahzad Sharjeel

Can one nation's freedom become a millstone around another's neck? That too across oceans and over mountains as mighty as the Himalayas? The answer, unfortunately, is, yes. The Brits and their cousins in America had to have their tea. The Chinese would only sell it for silver dollars. The American War of Independence scuttled silver mining. Jack Beeching has meticulously documented in The Chinese Opium Wars how by 1781 no silver remittances had reached India for two years. To make matters worse for the East India Company and its patrons in London, opium production of two years from Patna remained unsold. The quadrangle of tea-silver-opium-war came together.

Boston was not just the scene of the Tea Party but also home to clans called Boston Brahmins. These traders — some in teens monopolised America's opium trade with China. Amitav Ghosh, author of Smoke and Ashes, holds that almost all merchant communities in East and West India had their initial capital accumulation through opium. The generally peaceable and philanthropic Parsis were no exception. Rustomjee Cowasjee's clippers 'Sylph' and 'Cowasjee Family' were considered the fastest vessels in the opium trade. In fact, philanthropy is the common hallmark of opium fortunes from India to Holland and from Britain to the US.

Things have a way of coming full circle. After decades of trying to stem the tide of foreign drugs like heroin, cocaine, ice, etc, the US faces a 'made in America' opioid pandemic. Powerful family names have been tarnished, skeletons are tumbling out of cupboards, and foundation plaques have been removed as university and museum fore. Poppies are, after all, not just flowers. the tale from the beginning. The vernacular term 'posti' (lethargic) is derived from 'post', Persian the poppy bulb.Another term used for these substance abusers is 'afyonchi', which reflects the drugs' antecedents more closely and precisely. Afyon is a region in Turkey that was famous for its poppy crop in the olden days. Opium's medicinal use is miraculous, especially for pain management amongst the chronically ill, and has been employed for millennia. Opium forms the basis for most other, nonchemical illicit drugs and has posed a major problem for governments for well over a century. Poppy and its main derivative morphine are essential for pharmaceutical purposes, and preventing them from falling into the wrong hands has proved near impossible; the profit margins are just mind-boggling. No other nation knows the debilitating effects of opium dependence like our Chinese friends. No other nation has so brazenly forced it upon a hapless people as

Two major wars were imposed on China between 1839 to 1860 to force it to not just open its ports for the British ships carrying opium, but making it mandatory for the Chinese to buy this agent of destruction and allow its free use across the land. Drugs, wars, civil unrest and politics go hand in hand. Those calling for a cap, and rightly so, on the range of punishments that can be meted out by military courts, must also think about how various types and quantities of drugs inexplicably show up in the possession of political opponents. Planting 20 kilograms of heroin on a member of the opposition is as bad as ensuring capital punishment, military courts or not. Health insurance for journalists, artists step forward to equitable Pakistan: PM

Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif on Thursday said that the introduction of a health insurance facility for journalists and artists was a step forward to achieving the milestone of an equitable Pakistan as dreamt by Ouaid-e-Azam. He was addressing the ceremony of agreement signing between the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting and State Life Insurance Corporation for providing health insurance cards to journalists, media workers, and artists as well as technical workers associated with the film industry.

The prime minister said the agreement was of utmost importance as it addressed the media men
