Nawaz's return

After living in London in selfexile for the last four years, PML-N leader Nawaz Sharif is finally set to return to Pakistan next month. This is welcome news.

This paper has time and again called on Mr Sharif to return and face political and legal realities and end the remote management of his party — both when the PML-N was in opposition and then in government.

That he is finally ready to return to the country and engage with his party and supporters face to face will come as a relief to his party's second-tier leadership that has spent the last year making too many trips to London to seek Mr Sharif's advice on several issues.

However, the country Mr Sharif is returning to is, in many ways, quite different to the one he left in 2019. The economy is in a historic mess and businesses are rapidly losing confidence. Households cannot pay their electricity and food bills.

The government is not generating enough revenue has stirred up new thinking to address any of these serious challenges, and there are their exams earlier this year no quick fixes to the November 2023 as offered country's woes. Terrorism, by the Cambridge Board, too, is on the rise. The state about their future, given of human rights in the country is dire. And political space is as narrow as ever.

In this grave situation, what message will Mr Sharif give to his supporters? How exam system through a difwill he explain the last 16 ferent lens. The return of the elder Sharif has often been linked to the timing of general elections in the country by members of his party. Now that Pakistan holds an unusual he is returning, he must call pack of cards. It has no for timely elections — and kings. Though Mr Sharif's key rival has been removed from the political battlefield for now, the matter of the PML-N's bruised support remains. Understanding this crisis

Sakib Sherani

Pakistan is experiencing its most severe economic crisis in recent history. However, as I have argued previously, this crisis is "a crisis like no other" (Dawn, May 2022). It is not just an economic meltdown, but a confluence of myriad and complex challenges in the political, governance and environment domains.

With regards to the economy, the current episode is comparable in many ways to the economic crises that have devastated countries such as Argentina, Mexico, Greece and Lebanon, etc in the past. Public commentators as well as policymakers appear to have been slow to recognise the magnitude and complexity of the crisis. Partly due to a lack of appreciation, and largely due to political considerations, the policy response since last year has course of the next few also been slow, behind the curve and, now, deeply flawed More recent plans formulated to respond to the perennial crisis via attracting investment in a handful of sectors of the economy are overly optimistic as well as simplistic, reducing the country's myriad and complex problems that hinder capital formation, the creation of an entrepreneurial ecosystem, the development of a vibrant export sector, etc. down to a mere shortage of dollar liquidity. For these reasons, it is important to understand why the crisis Pakistan is currently experiencing is so different than the past.

First, this one is unprecedented in its severity as well as its complexity since it has emanated from a confluence of multiple shocks. A large terms of trade shock since 2021 coincided with the impact of a 'sudden stop' in external capital availability caused by the aggressive monetary tightening by the US Federal Reserve. In addition, the country is in a fullblown public debt crisis, with the need for a very large years, one that could total around three to four per cent of GDP — by far the highest the country has ever undertaken.

Along with the fiscal adjustment, Pakistan also needs a degree of orderly (ie negotiated) sovereign debt restructuring or re-profiling, without which its debt repayment capacity will remain unsustainable. To compound the situation, the crisis could also envelope the country's banking sector at some later stage, despite substantial capital and liquidity buffers at present (more on this later). Second, the sense of a polycrisis is accentuated by the fact that the country is facing a political and constitutional crisis since April 2022. Political uncertainty and institutional gridlock are complicating policy responses and whole-of-nation' approaches that are required for an early resolution. Third, the current economic crisis is accompanied by a crisis of confidence — not just with regard to the prospects of evitable under this scethe economy or the rupee nario.

in the short term, but more fundamentally, by a lack of confidence in how the country is run, and in the ability as well as willingness of the elites responsible to change course. Investors, economic agents as well as the country's youth are voting with their feet via capital flight, dollar-isation and brain drain. Of all the problems afflicting us, the vaporisation of confidence in Pakistan's long-run prospects is perhaps the most pernicious — and

unrecognised.

Fourth, the country's banking sector could experience heightened stress in the months ahead, unlike in previous episodes. There are two potential channels: 1) the government, the banking system's largest borrower, is under increasing fiscal duress, with its fiscal position now clearly unsustainable; 2) any restructuring of sovereign external debt could include domestic public debt with bank credit to government the largest component. A significant hair-challenging environment, prospects the Pakistan's economy for the next three to four years appear less than sanguine, despite the relative optimism surrounding the securing of a nine-month Stand-By Arrangement from the IMF. While the near-term risk of a sovereign default has been averted for the interim, contingent on continued implementation of IMF conditionality. stabilisation and austerity policies will need to remain in place beyond the current SBA as the country undertakes a debt workout, one that could include domestic debt as mentioned above. Economic growth will remain suppressed and financial conditions restrictive, while the overall business

environment will be challenging, especially for the

of political instability. Climate-related shocks are grey rhinos (slow-moving, probable risks with high impacts) that can precipitate at any time over the forecast horizon. Vulnerability to external shocks will remain high until 'break out' conditions prevail. Each of the conditions above is necessary though not sufficient on its own. Ultimately, the surest guarantee of finding a path to recovery and durable prosperity is for all stakeholders to view the current crisis as an opportunity for wide-ranging, deep and credible reform.

Tailpiece: Unfortunately, another IMF programme appears inevitable, simply because despite the populist talk, there is no credible and workable alternative plan that anyone has crafted or presented. The glib talk on the media about living without the IMF is, unfortunately, without any basis, and is designed to play to the gallery. Pakistan needs to have its external debt rescheduled, and an IMF programme is necesevated, which could be sary for this process. --

Fix the education system

Kamila Hyat

The recent controversy over A-level results in Pakistan on education. While most Alevel students who sat for others are more worried how the grades affect students' chances of scoring admission in top-ranking institutions. It is not just students but their parents, teachers and others from various spheres of life who are also now looking at the format to some degree this ent ways. At present, espeyear – a shift from a mainly cially at the FSc and FA levrote-based system to somethinking and ability to put most students in the counfascinating. Teams of young

It is unclear if this is truly the case, but those who have been teaching at schools offering O- and Alevel education for years do agree that just like the FSc and matric exams, these exams now promote rote learning; they are now less intellectually demanding of students whose creativity and talent is tested in this. This is something that people are wondering about. There are now other exams available in the country which can be seen as an alternative to A-level and appear to provide students a greater opportunity to use critical thinking mind and come up with original thought. The idea of education should be to develop in students the ability to think for themselves and go forward from that point on, instead of encouraging them to memorize page after page of text and repeat it verbatim on answer sheets.

Moving away from els – which is the examinahigh dependence on rote learning. The fact that teachers are not trained to teach. but only to make students learn all lessons by heart. simply exacerbates the problem. We need to move away from this.

In recent months, there has been much discussion over the national curriculum and how to improve it. This can be achieved by simply altering the examination system and setting it up in a way that requires students to think as individuals and not repeat long passages of text as if they were some form of robots, or as 'parrots'. This is essential to creating capacities which many parents and even teachers do not believe students possess. It is essential then to move away from this system.

The ability of young children to think and come up with answers to complex questions was exhibited earlier this year at a session this could in fact be the criti-cal step needed to alter our group which offered winners a chance to visit NASA in the US. Students from low-income schools were asked to develop a scientific object of their choice and on their own. The results were forward arguments clearly. try – we have an extremely girls and boys worked together and came up with interesting inventions, including making paper from chicken feathers. The winning teams visited NASA in Houston and gained an experience which would not have been available to them had it not been for this effort. Besides this, we have also seen plenty of other examples of students performing extraordinarily well in other tasks at school when they are given a chance to think and come up with original ideas This would of course mean some major steps within the educational system, beginning at schools and ideally moving on to higher education perhaps in one or two years at the time. In the first place, teachers will need to be trained to educate children as intelligent beings and not as objects capable of rote learning like a recording machine. To do so, they need to undergo new courses and a new curriculum for government-school teachers as well as a compulsory criterion that teachers at private schools have proper certification.

In addition, parents and children would also need to become accustomed to the new mode of learning and understand that it does indeed constitute education and not just games as many parents believe to be true of exam systems which demand the child lead the way in the educational process. The fact that children everywhere are able to think is a well-established fact, but the problem lies in our failure to allow them the opportunity to do so or to move forward through their wit rather than through memorization.

Indeed the fact that our exam system is based on memorization may be the most basic flaw in our exam system. We do not need a single curriculum: we need a curriculum that has a basic point on which all students must come through - such as standards in Urdu. Maths and ideally the native language of students as well as English at a later point in their education. We also need an education system which has the capacity to introduce tests and exam papers which force students to think and develop their ideas or thoughts, instead of relying on borrowed ones from exam guidebooks, still widely available at all educational stores and at roadside markets everywhere in big cities system in this manner could be of enormous benefit to children everywhere and also help them develop the skills they would need in the outside world as well as from high learning. It is imperative that we begin putting in place such a system block by block and keep building it up. The results of the A-level exam should act as a reminder of what we need to do. It is hard to believe that the results were affected entirely because exams were suspended in parts of the country by political protests. It seems far more likely that at least a large number of candidates do not have the skills Cambridge seeks in its students. Our examination and teaching system needs to change so that our students at all levels can move forward and not be held back by our focus on rote learning and the many flaws it brings with it. This has to be our first priority in the education sector so that young people can learn how to think, and we can produce thinkers like Dr Abdus Salam and others, who once made their way to the world's top centres of research while starting from our government schools. --

Next week, the UN is convening three high-level meetings on universal health coverage (UHC), tuberculosis (TB) and pandemic prevention, preparedness and response (PPPR) at its 78th General Assembly session.

These meetings are set to review the progress made on these intersecting global hea-lth challenges as they are tied to the Sustain-able Development Goals (SDGs) and the cha-nged global pandemic architecture. They give heads of states and governments a chance to revisit the post-Covid global health landscape and recommit themselves to sustained action on the commitments en--shrined in the political declarations on TB and UHC made in 2018 and 2019 respectively.

The 2019 declarations on UHC-SDG 3.8 set a target of reaching an additional one billion people by 2023 and reversing trends in medical impoverishment caused by out-of-pocket expenses. Yet the latest UĤC commitment review's key findings suggest that progress on UHC has stalled and in some cases reversed. This state of play on the follow-up underscores the need for expedited action on delivering on political commitments on TB-SDG 3.3 which are way off track. Covid has blown these goals off track.

The theme of the 2023 high-level meeting on TB is "advancing science, finance and innovation, and their benefits, to urgently epidemic, in particular, by ensuring equitable access to prevention, testing, treatment and care". At the 2023 meeting, progress on the targets set and achieved so far will be reviewed and a future action plan framed.

In the run-up to the 2023 high-level meeting, civil society groups voiced their expectations of the meeting in May in New York. The key policy asks which emerged out of the civil society consultation focused on reinforcing commitment to reaching all people affected by TB, accelerating research and development in new TB vaccine, drugs and diagnostic services, enhancing funding for TB programmes and prioritising TB across UHC, primary healthcare, pandemic prevention, preand anti-microbial resistance.

The first UN high-level meeting on pandemic prevention, preparedness, and response has assumed special urgency against the backdrop of the devastating impact of Covid-19 on health systems, SDGs, and pre-existing health inequalities. PPPR is especially important in relation to serious threats which future pandemics pose to the realisation of the SDGs, UHC and TB as demonstrated by the Covid pandemic. The Pandemic Action Network of civil society groups has called on heads of states for vigorous international action on pandemic preparedness in health and beyond health sectors in whole-of-system approach, as well as increasing ownership and accountability of pandemic preparedness and response plans, while ensuring the widest possible participation of civil society and others in these efforts.

However, the draft of the political declaration has been described by health press and advocates as long on words and short on commitments and lacking in ambition. Specific actions have been kicked down the line to 2026 when the UN will convene another highlevel meeting to further deliberate on the state of pandemic preparedness. Three years is too long a period when it comes to pandemics, particularly when existing pandemic preparedness and response mechanisms have been found wanting in the Covid

More importantly, the publicly released draft of the political declaration does not include any specific financing targets for global and domestic health spending on pandemic preparedness and response. An even earl-ier proposal re---la--ted to the establishment of an independent monitoring body to assess paredness and response member-state co--m--pliance with the pandemic treaty and spending commitment has been done away with in the draft declaration. UHC, the elimination of TB and new pandemic preparedness and response mechanisms are key to achieving the SDG goals, intersecting and interlinked with nature as they are. Therefore, the convening of three high-level meetings on these global health issues is a rare opportunity for world leaders and member states to tackle global health challenges in a synchronised and integrated way. Pakistan's caretaker government should show leadership and commitment to the broader idea of ensuring that no one is left behind in UHC drives and in accessing new TB vaccine and drugs and that the future pandemic response is robust, equitable and well financed. All this will require careful preparation, nimble-footed health diplomacy and political will at these important high-level meetings in September. Like other member states. Pakistan too should step up. -- Courtesy Dawn

Religious, political leaders unite for interfaith harmony, urge justice for Jaranwala

FAISALABAD (APP): The leaders from various religious and political representing diverse faiths and beliefs, on Thursday emphasized that Pakistan belonged to all its citizens and no individual, group or organization had the right to use religion as a pretext to take the law into their own hands.

The leaders including Chairman Pakistan Ulema Council (PUC) Hafiz Muhammad Mahmood Ashrafi, Bishop Dr Riaz Rahmat, Allama Tahir Al Hasan, Mufti Nasrullah, Mufti Hanif Asmatullah Muawiya, Maulana Aminul Haque Ashrafi said this while addressing an interfaith

harmony conference. Addressing the recent tragic incidents in Jaranwala and Sargodha, they had called for swift justice against the culprits and demanded that the facts be laid bare before the nation. They stressed the importance of adhering to the principles of justice and the rule of law.

Mahmood Ashrafi announced the 'Secrat Rehmat-ul-Alameen Conference' to be held across the country from the first to the end of Rabi-ul-Awwal to educate the public about the teachings of the Prophet Muhammad (Peace Be Upon Him) regarding the rights of minorities, women and humanity as a whole.

Furthermore, he said the PUC and Christian leadership would host joint Seerat Conferences in Lahore and Islamabad to facilitate dialogue and collaboration between Muslim and Christian leaders on matters of shared concern. He said Chief of Army Staff General Syed Asim Munir and Prime Minister Anwaar ul Haq Kakar had jointly called for stringent actions against hoarders of dollars, flour, sugar, and those involved in electricity and gas theft. They emphasized that individuals responsible for exacerbating artificial economic crises should not be granted any leniency, he added. Ashrafi underscored Chairman PUP Hafiz the fundamental right of Peace, equitable development inevitable to attract trade, stop brain drain: President

ISLAMABAD (APP): President Dr Arif Alvi on Thursday while calling the international responsibility for peace a foundation for trade, urged the world to ensure equitable development across the world to address the issue of brain drain from developing countries. The president, addressing the Annual LCCI Ambassadors' Dinner 2023, exemplified Europe saying that by enhancing mutual trade, the world had moved towards peace but it required enhanced efforts to create an enabling atmosphere all around. He said Pakistan, being the fifth largest country in the world did not need any charity but the trade with the international world.

He said Pakistan desired the developed world to share its expertise in in-formation technology with Pakistan as pursuing the ideals of "one humanity", they should spend their resources for the betterment of the people outside their borders too. President Alvi said the brain drain made the nations lose competent individuals despite having spent huge resources on their education.

The provision of equitable development would help such individuals to contribute to their own countries. Recounting Europe's journey to get rid of war, the president said women and children had always been the major casualties of conflicts, and the establishment of peace required the elimination of exploitation. Highlighting the double standards, the president said the signing of peace conventions and their violations could not go on simultaneously.

He said the world must focus on enhancing cooperation for the betterment of the next generations as all the world religions preached human service President Alvi said that as artificial intelligence was impacting human decision making, it required timely efforts to tacklethe challenge before it got out of control. He urged the diplomats to persuade their respective business communities to take advantage of Pakistan's renewed commitment to attract investment with a particular focus on a few sectors through a one-
