elections, and maybe, they now want to run away from general elections," he said while addressing the public at the inauguration ceremony of Hussanabad Water Filtration Plant in Hyderabad.

His statement appeared to be a criticism of the PPP's allies for prioritising delimitation over holding elections within the constitutionally mandated 90-day period following the dissolution of assemblies.

The PPP was one of the major allies in the coalition, which also included the PML-N and Jamiat Ulema-i-Islam (Fazl), that came to power after ousting former prime minister Imran Khan through a no-confidence motion in April last year.

The coalition's term in the government ended on August 9 with the premature dissolution of the National Assembly, three days ahead of its constitutionally mandated period.

According to Article 224 of the Constitution, elections should be held within 90 days — by November 9 in this case — of the premature dissolution of the NA.

However, the Election Commission of Pakistan has ruled out elections being held this year, citing the need to conduct fresh delimitation of constituencies after the notification of new 2023 digital census results. The ECP refers to Section 17(2) of the Elections Act on the matter, which states: "The commission shall delimit constituencies after every census is officially published."

For its part, the PPP has taken a tough stance for elections within three months, standing against its former allies who seem to be favouring polls after the completion of the delimitation process, which could stretch them beyond the constitutionally mandated limit of 90 days.

However, PPP Co-Chairman and Bilawal's father, Asif Ali Zardari, said in a statement yesterday that "completing the delimitation exercise was necessary before holding polls".

But, when Bilawal was queried on the statement that seemed a deviation from the PPP's stance, he stated his preference to stick by decisions made by the party leadership, i.e. elections within 90 days, instead of his father's stance, saying he was only "bound to follow his father in family matters".

"You should ask Zardari Sahib [why he issued this statement]," he replied to a question posed by a reporter, who referred to his father's statement in support of elections being held after fresh delimitation.

There is a great deal that Pakistan can contribute to the knowledge and experience of the global community in the fight against pandemics, he added.

Pakistan has most recently faced the ravages of unprecedented floods and the resultant spread of disease, highlighting the urgent need to strengthen disease response and surveillance systems.

The recent pandemic has shown that spread of infectious disease in any part of the world is a threat to the entire global community. Therefore it is a shared responsibility, the meeting was told.

The meeting agreed on the thematic areas to be discussed in the summit which will include several panel discussions.

A number of committees were constituted by the Secretary Health to ensure the holding of the mega event in a befitting manner.

The international moot will culminate in issuance of an Islamabad Declaration that would reflect the global commitment to fighting the spread of disease in unison and ensuring an optimal level of preparation through a stronger and resilient health infrastructure, shared Iftikhar Shallwani.

JKSDMI will continue to expose ugly, cruel face of India to world

ISLAMABAD (INP): The Chairman of Jammu Kashmir Self-Determination Movement International (JKSDMI), Raja Najabat Hussain, has said that his organisation will continue to expose the ugly and cruel face of India to the whole world.

Raja Najabat Hussain expressed these views while addressing a dinner given in his honour by the former Director General of Mangla Dam Housing Authority Chaudhry Zulfiqar Azam.

He said the international community, instead of looking at their trade interests with India, should look at the ongoing human rights violations and massacres of innocent people and make all political and social relations with India subject to the end of ongoing human rights violations in India.

He said the dangerous way in which India has started the massacre of the people of occupied Jammu and Kashmir and the minorities living in India can prove to be very dangerous not only for this region but also for the whole world. He will continue to fight the cause of Kashmiris until the entire Jammu and Kashmir becomes fully independent and joins Pakistan, he maintained.

Raja Najabat Hussain said the people of occupied Jammu and Kashmir want to join Pakistan, want to merge with Pakistan despite suffering oppression by India, and consider themselves to be a part of Pakistan in practice. He also demanded of the G20 countries to play their practical role to immediately stop the atrocities committed by the Indian forces in Jammu and Kashmir.

Health experts urge to ban nicotine products

ISLAMABAD (APP): The health activists are urgently advocating for a ban on emerging tobacco products in the country due to their highly addictive nature. The Society for the Protection of the Rights of Child (SPARC) issued a press release highlighting the critical need for a ban on these harmful tobacco and nicotine products, which are gaining popularity among children and young adults in the country.

It is important to note that this misinformation is actively propagated by the large tobacco industry in an attempt to expand its consumer base across various age groups.

Malik Imran Ahmed, Country Head of the Campaign for Tobacco-Free Kids (CTFK), emphasized that Pakistan currently lacked comprehensive legislation addressing the promotion, sale, and advertisement of e-cigarettes and similar products.

Youth at risk: cyberbullying epidemic grips Pakistan

ISLAMABAD (APP): In today's fame-driven world, where one's worth is often measured by their social media followers, Pakistan has emerged as a prominent player with over 72 million internet users. However, this growing access to free social media platforms has brought about significant concerns regarding e-security. Pakistan ranks as the 5th largest mobile phone market in Asia. Internet regulation falls under the jurisdiction of the Pakistan Telecommunication Authority (PTA) and the Federal Investigation Agency (FIA). Data from these authorities highlights alarming issues within our society, ranging from privacy breaches and disagreements to political rivalries, disinformation, and the targeting of religious and gender minorities.

Development Working Group on Broadband And Gender defines cyber violence against women, encompassing hate speech, publishing blasphemous content, hacking, intercepting private communications, identity theft, online stalking (criminal harassment), and uttering threats, which can even lead to convincing a target to end their own life. It is crucial to acknowledge the United Nations International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women, which recognizes online intimidation, threats, privacy breaches, and identity theft against vulnerable groups, primarily women.

Cyberbullying knows no boundaries and affects individuals across all age groups and backgrounds. Even prominent figures, including politicians, celebrities, and internet personalities, have not been immune to its harmful impact. Notably, even the caretaker prime minister found himself targeted by online trolls, with increased Pakistani emigration becoming a contentious topic in the cyber world.

One tragic case involved Dr. Amir Liaquat, a renowned anchor, politician, and media personality, who took his own life following the leak of explicit videos. E-security breaches have taken lives in Pakistan, with misinformation being a significant contributor to the problem. To establish a secure internet society, parental guidance, teacher involvement, and law enforcement are essential. Monitoring teenagers' online activities is crucial to reduce cybercrimes and protect them from online abusers, identity theft, cyber intimidation, stalking, financial fraud, and more.

The Prevention of Electronic Crimes Act 2016 (PECA) addresses defamation, extending the right to file complaints to any member of the public, even if they are not directly defamed. PECA criminalizes false information that harms a person's privacy or reputation when intentionally and publicly displayed.

Lack of clarity

The chaos and confusion within the ranks of those hoping for the Constitution to be upheld has weakened their hand. Consider the PTI, which has recently demanded that President Arif Alvi exercise his constitutional power and announce a date for the general elections forthwith.

According to a press release, the party's core committee passed a unanimous resolution to this effect during a recent meeting. Interestingly, there was no mention of who actually attended the meeting or where it was held.

With most of the party's senior leadership currently in prison or on the lam, the PTI is trying to put up a brave face. However, it clearly is in no position to be making demands.

Then there is the PPP, which seems rather confused about its commitment to constitutional principles. Just days ago, the party's central executive committee said it would push the Election Commission — legally, if need be — to ensure elections were held within the stipulated time frame.

Publicly, however, top PPP leaders have seemed a lot more flexible on election dates. It is, therefore, unsurprising that many believe the party's sudden remembrance of democratic values is little more than a bargaining chip.

Meanwhile, the legal fraternity, too, has entered the fray. But while the Supreme Court Bar Association and the Pakistan Bar Council both seem to be in agreement that elections must not be delayed, they stand divided on other matters. The former recently hosted the All Pakistan Lawyers Convention to put forth the legal community's demands from a single platform, but the PBC chose not to attend.

President Alvi stands at the centre of the crisis, but he, too, seems to be having second thoughts after a tentative attempt to assert his position. With the pressure building on him to announce a date, rumours have been circulating that a recent visit from two high-profile officers might be the reason why he has been keeping a low profile.

Whatever the separate challenges being faced by each of these stakeholders, they need to demonstrate some unity of purpose if they are truly committed to upholding the Constitution. There are some in this country who view the law as an inconvenience in the way of their grand plans.

Much damage has already been done thus far because the resistance to their unlawful actions has been weak and unorganised. Now, the only hope for those who wish to see the constitutional order restored is to refocus their energies on the core demand — free and fair elections within 90 days.

The ongoing assault on the Constitution must be resisted if the nation is to continue hoping for a democratic future. It may yet be an attainable goal. The mistake made in allowing the KP and Punjab elections to be delayed must not be repeated.

The recent cross-border infiltrations and operational strikes by terrorist networks operating from Afghanistan have raised concerns about the Afghan Taliban's direct involvement in these attacks. A terrorist group cannot launch massive cross-border attacks involving a significant number of terrorists inside Pakistan without the support and approval of the Taliban regime. If these doubts have any substance, this is tantamount to declaring war against a state.

Social media and online media reports are also circulating about the Haqqanis' direct involvement in these intrusions, citing security officials. This may surprise those who believed that close ties existed between the Haqqanis and the Pakistani security establishment, as the relationship between the two has now apparently become strained. The extent of this perceived bitterness in relations is not known, and neither the Haqqanis nor the Pakistani establishment have officially indicated the nature of any dispute between them. However, Pakistan has officially registered its protest concerning the involvement of Afghan fighters in the attack on the military cantonment in the Zhob district of Balochistan.

Only if there is official confirmation from one of the parties about the dispute, can we speculate about its nature based on several factors.

It is a fact that the TTP has a close relationship with the Haqqanis that has overseen the negotiation process between the government and the TTP. This process failed, causing some initial dents in the confidence of Pakistan's security institutions. Religious, ideological, tribal, and political factors are also important from various perspectives. The organisational relationship between the Afghan Taliban and Pakistani militant groups has evolved over time, especially after the resurgence of the former in their country. The Afghan Taliban developed a nexus with the Pakistani establishment and militant groups, which, while not mutually exclusive, involves complex relationships among the three actors.

Pakistan has strategic interests in Afghanistan and has often been accused of paying no heed to the presence of the Taliban on its soil. The Taliban, in turn, have relied on safe havens, financial support, and fighters primarily from Pakistan and other neighbouring states like Iran. Militant groups in Pakistan have provided human resource to the Taliban; many of these fighters became disillusioned due to shifts in the state's policies on jihad. While the 'Quetta shura' hesitated to recruit Pakistani fighters, the Haqqanis and 'Peshawar shura' actively incorporated them, creating both combat units and financial and logistical supply chains. Al Qaeda has also influenced these Pakistani militants, further radicalising them against the state.

Historical accounts may reveal more surprising details, but so far, the most comprehensive research on the Taliban movement has been conducted by Antonio Giustozzi. In his book The Taliban at War, Giustozzi notes that a unique aspect of the Haqqani Network is its direct recruitment of Pakistani fighters. As of 2015, around 10 per cent of the 'Miranshah shura's' forces were Pakistani, primarily drawn from other jihadist groups such as TTP, Lashkar-e-Taiba, and Lashkar-i-Jhangvi.

According to reports, the significant presence of volunteers from Pakistan as well as other countries has contributed to the Haqqanis' image as being more aligned with global jihadist movements like Al Qaeda, as opposed to the Quetta shura. The Peshawar shura is also believed to have been heavily reliant on Pakistani militants, expanding its reach to other cities in the country, where it's said to have recruited hundreds of Pakistanis.

In summary, Pakistan has underestimated the potential problems posed by fighters who have been part of the Afghan Taliban, especially compared to the TTP and its affiliate groups with whom it initiated talks under the Haqqanis' supervision. Reports are that thousands of these fighters may have returned to Pakistan, many of them apparently joining the TTP and its factions, and the rest remaining under the patronage of various Taliban commanders, including the Haqqanis. News has appeared about the TTP and its allied social media accounts about faction mergers or small militant groups joining the TTP, usually involving militants who were once directly engaged with the Taliban.

The Haqqanis have accommodated many in their government and security forces, including Adnan Rasheed, a former Pakistani Air Force employee, who joined Al Qaeda and specialised in jailbreaks. Adnan Rasheed was released from Bannu jail in April 2012 by militants. However, the Taliban cannot accommodate all these fighters, and with their return to Pakistan increasingly likely, they are supporting their cause for fighting within Pakistan.

Pakistan had concerns that these returning militants would continue their terrorist activities. During talks with the TTP, it became clear that the TTP and other terrorist groups had no intention of ceasing their activities. If these individuals were to be integrated into the general population, they would pose a greater risk, not just through terrorist activities but also by spreading the ideological influence of the Taliban and Al Qaeda.

These terrorists, now led by the TTP, are exploiting Pakistan's vulnerabilities with regard to territory, resources, and support base. The recent terrorist attacks in the Zhob and Sherani districts of Balochistan, along with the intrusion into Chitral, are all components of a broader strategy. Al Qaeda apparently had an eye on the region which borders Chitral since long for establishing a new base for supporting terrorist movements in the region, including China. This situation is precarious for Pakistan and the Taliban regime, and they must find a solution before it worsens. -- Courtesy Dawn

Presence of militants

Looking homeward, dizzily

Ghazi Salahuddin

As the poet said: 'They are not long, the days of wine and roses'. Any extravagant retreat from the daily rigours of our lives, if we are at all able to secure it, does come to an end. And so I have to return to the raw winds and old wounds of Pakistan after an absence of about six weeks. This, to be sure, is not an unusual experience for me. Since both our daughters live abroad, these trips have become an annual feature for many, many years. There is generally no great excitement about leaving Pakistan and coming back after an interval. But why am I so anxious about it on this occasion? What is different now, in my personal state of affairs or in the larger context of the country's social, political and economic circumstances?

Yes, the thoughts that I feel burdened with as we leave our elder daughter's house in southern California are somewhat unusual, even scary. Strangely, this apprehension relates to both personal and collective concerns. At one level, there is this pain that I share with a large number of ageing parents living away from our children and grandchildren. It poses the existential question of whether to emigrate to be with the loved ones or stay, nearly unattended, in Pakistan. The cost of living apart is horrendous, and not just in a material sense.

Somehow, this sensation of getting precariously old has deepened. At the same time, the idea of shifting to an alien territory is to be decisively rejected, in spite of passionate persuasions and sober arguments that we have to deal with. That Pakistan has become a great place to go away from is valid for younger people who are fearful of raising their children in a society that has apparently lost its bearings.

It is truly disconcerting to find Pakistanis, in the country and abroad, who have little faith in the future of their country. For many, it is the problem of making ends meet. For others, it is law and order. I know a family that left the country because of what they perceived was the drug scene in the elite schools of Karachi. Actually, it is a system that is broken — administratively, morally and intellectually.

Then, the country is at present passing through a specific phase when the caretakers, who are being taken care of by superior forces, are in office and the process of cleaning the PTI stables, in the aftermath of May 9, is continuing. Meanwhile, the army leadership is getting into gear to mend Pakistan's economy, as some developments have certified this week.

On Wednesday, Chief of Army Staff Gen Asim Munir asserted, on Defence Day, that "a strong economy is a must for the country's impregnable defence". This linkage between economy and military defence was further clarified the next day, on Thursday, when the top brass resolved, in a Corps Commanders' meeting, to "wholeheartedly" assist the government in curbing all illegal activities that hamper economic growth and stability.

Earlier, on Sunday, the COAS had assured the business community, in a widely covered session, of fostering transparency in dollar exchange and interbank rates. This contributed to some strength in the value of the Pakistani currency, though not enough to raise the spirits of an economically ravaged populace. In any case, it will be interesting to see how the military can play a role in GDP growth.

I have just become aware of the army's intended advance into the battlefield of the economy because I had resolved to by and large keep away from news from Pakistan during this vacation. I also avoided political conversations with Pakistani expatriates. A large number of Pakistanis in the US are ardent supporters of Imran Khan and, considering their lack of understanding of the existing realities, it is pointless to talk to them.

For that matter, I have not carefully been watching Pakistan. There has been no conscious attempt to catch on with realities that are emerging in the public domain. In a vague sense, I do suspect that some kind of change is in progress. Conventionally they say that the more things change in our country, the more they remain the same. But it should also be true that the more they change, the more they cannot be the same.

This would mean that I am not returning to the same Pakistan that I had left. Hence, it is fair to wonder if there is more hope now or less. In other words, what direction do perceptive observers see the country moving — and it would be fine if they say that it would be worse before it gets better. Ah, will things ever get better?

Why not? An eternal optimist may argue, with a disdain for what he can see with open eyes and think with an open mind. In fact, this is what the rulers must do; see and think. And, to compensate for their inadequacies in this regard; listen. Listen to those certified social scientists, historians and scholars who are becoming an endangered species in our political habitat.

You see, a kind of gloom is intruding on my mind as I return to Pakistan. I should instead be looking back at the time I have spent with the family in settings that felt like a dream. We were, for that brief interval, not concerned about the worries of the world and what I was reading about the epidemic of anxiety spreading in the United States did not affect our joy of being together. One is to be very lucky indeed to be able to steal such moments of bliss in a life that is generally not very rewarding.

However, I should admit that there was usually an undercurrent of melancholy in meetings with old friends and close relatives. Like in novels and arty movies, such close encounters can reveal new truths about relationships that, ultimately, are our real sustenance. -- Courtesy TheNews

Sleepless in Karachi

Muna Khan

When I moved to Hanoi in 2008 to work at a newspaper as a copy editor, my toughest challenge was re-adjusting my meal timings. Our shifts began at 2pm, ended at 9pm and we received a half-hour break to grab dinner around 6pm, so we could only really go in the neighbourhood to eat. Vietnam is a diner's delight especially when it comes to street food and affordable cafés all over cities, towns, villages. You're never starved for options.

Hanoi awoke by sunrise and was dead by 9pm. So of course, I adjusted. I ate breakfast by 8am, lunch at noon and dinner at 6pm, even on my days off. Everyone did. I have continued this habit, with exceptions and only in Pakistan where I'm convinced we're all owls. Whenever I have struggled with sleep, I have modified my routine to accommodate it — sometimes with supplements, tweaking diet, exercise, not watching television news past 8pm, etc. But for the last year or so, I am struggling to sleep again and am sicker, slower, unhappy.

I suspect I am not alone. I am consumed with thoughts about the economy, the country's security, the speed at which we seem to be moving towards martial rule and how this impacts my family's future. I do not know what else to disconnect from without living in a world oblivious to one's surroundings.

There is a saying how sleep is a luxury few can afford; I think the same is true for living in delusion, homo sapiens ate but there are new studies to show our ancestors ate grains and carbs and gluten — things that cause fear today.

We can return to practising our ancestors' habits but can we break our reliance on our devices which play a major role in disrupting our sleep environment and behaviour? It's not about X hours of sleep a night but consistent hours of sleep.

Light majorly impacts the circadian rhythm which is why the neuroscientist podcaster Andrew Huberman (must watch) recommends spending 20 minutes in natural light within an hour of waking to regulate mood and energy levels. Most of our internal clocks follow the sun's pattern. The more exposure you have to artificial light post sunset, the more disrupted your circadian rhythm and sleep.

I have avoided all doctors' following advice because I know it will be my next toughest challenge: switch off screens at least two hours before bedtime. The device's blue light disrupts the sleep cycle as it suppresses the production of melatonin, a natural hormone which helps us feel sleepy. I admit whenever I read a book in bed, I fall asleep quicker but I'm struggling to break the Netflix habit.

While it will be hard, it is also the only advice I can truly afford to do along with drinking three litres of water (12 glasses a day), most of it in the day, the last glass being two hours before I sleep. And eating my last meal four hours before I sleep if it is meat and two hours if it is plant based. However, hearing my doctor's number one advice had a profound impact on me and inspired this column: practice happiness. It is key to good sleep. -- Courtesy Dawn

Redefining defence

Aizaz Ahmad Chaudhry

Every Sept 6, Pakistan marks Defence Day to celebrate the determination of the nation and its armed forces to defend the country against India's aggression in 1965. The war lasted only 17 days, and peace was restored by the Tashkent Agreement of 1966. As happens in most wars, there were no real winners. India was unable to penetrate Pakistan's defences. Pakistan could not liberate Jammu and Kashmir illegally occupied by India.

Regrettably, the experience of 1965 war did not prevent the two countries from fighting another war in 1971, leading to the separation of East Pakistan. In 1999, another limited war took place on the Kargil heights. However, in this century, the two neighbours have never fought a major war though they came close to it during the military stand-off of 2001-02. One reason is the nuclear deterrence that both countries established in May 1998. The other main reason is that the nature of war has changed. We are living in the age of hybrid wars, where kinetic action is the last resort, and much of the battle is waged in the information, economic and other domains to break the will of the enemy. This is sometimes referred to as the fifth-generation of war.

With the advent of artificial intelligence, we are witnessing the onset of sixth-generation warfare. Defence Day should be an occasion to prepare the nation to guard against today's complex wars that blend conventional, unconventional, economic, cyber, and psychological warfare, media manipulation, cultural invasions, and relentless propaganda to create confusion about the core values that hold a nation together. On most occasions, the target may not even know it is under attack.

An argument is often made that much of what Pakistan is facing is because of its own doing; we should, therefore, not blame others, and instead, address our own vulnerabilities. Others, however, believe we cannot disregard the possibility of hybrid war imposed by our detractors, manifested vividly in concerted disinformation campaigns, economic coercion, lawfare, and even cyberattacks. The National Security Policy, that was announced last year, advised a comprehensive approach to national security, comprising not just traditional defence but also economic and human security.

Hence we must be reminded that Pakistan needs a robust defence strategy that employs all elements of national power. Fortunately, our diplomacy is resilient and can serve as the first line of defence. Our armed forces are disciplined and organised. Our nuclear capability deters possible aggression. The entire nation got together against the menace of terrorism. We have a young intelligent human resource, which if educated and trained can serve the nation well. We are also blessed with agricultural and mineral wealth. And our diaspora is dynamic and ready to serve the motherland.

These are notable strengths. However, we need a strategy that integrates all these elements of national power. First and foremost, we need a whole-of-the-nation approach on matters of national security.

No decisions should be taken by any institution in isolation, nor by any leader on a whim. The chain is only as strong as its weakest link. To that end, forging broad political consensus on national security imperatives is an absolute must.

Secondly, most of our vulnerabilities stem from our weak economy. We spend more than we earn, obliging us to depend on foreign donors. Internal and external debts are mounting. Exports are stagnant. Doing business in Pakistan is not easy. Corruption is pervasive, and the inflation rate so high that the life of the common man has become miserable. The need of the hour is to give the highest priority to reviving our economy and building a national political consensus on economic policies. Unless we are economically resilient, modern warfare against us will remain a serious threat to national stability.

Thirdly, in a hybrid warfare environment, image is as important as reality. Since 9/11, Pakistan's image has been associated with terrorism and extremism. Hostile lobbies ensure that this image remains, despite the fact that Pakistan has fought against terrorism like no other nation has. Creative cultural diplomacy can help change the way the world looks at Pakistan, building on our strengths: glorious civilisational heritage, mighty mountains, and multiple faiths. Our film industry, academia, and diaspora can also help project our true image to millions of people around the world.

Addressing our vulnerabilities and inculcating good governance is the best way to defend our country in the years ahead. Our problems are monumental and may appear insurmountable, but failure is not an option. As Nelson Mandela said: "It always seems impossible until it's done." -- Courtesy Dawn

Factory owners, citizens warned against burning of trash

LAHORE (APP): Environmental experts have issued a stern warning to both factory owners and citizens, urging them to refrain from burning trash due to its detrimental impact on human and animal health. The Deputy Commissioner's office had previously imposed a ban on the incineration of various materials, including trash, tires, shoes, plastic, and raw wood in all brick kilns throughout the district.

According to environmentalist Mahmood Khalid Qamar, the combustion of prohibited materials, such as trash, plastic, and treated wood, poses a grave threat to the environment. These substances release toxic chemicals into the atmosphere, resulting in air pollution. This polluted air, when inhaled by both humans and animals, gives rise to severe health risks and leaves deposits in the soil, surface water, and on plants. Qamar emphasizes that open burning, in general, poses a significant risk to the environment and public health.

Director General

Mazhar Zaheer Abbas Malik, in a recent statement to the media, issued a stern warning to factory owners, cautioning against the use of plastic and shoes as fuel sources in combustion.

He emphasized that strict actions would be taken against those who fail to comply. Additionally, he urged farmers to refrain from burning rice crop residues, as this practice leads to soil, groundwater, lake, river, and stream pollution. Furthermore, outdoor burning of crop residues carries the risk of sparking wildfires. Malik stressed the importance of burning only approved materials and adhering to state regulations to mitigate these harmful effects.

Naseem-ur-Rehman Shah, the Director of the Environmental Protection Department (EPD), pointed out that burning trash not only results in the production of polluted ash and smoke but can also release hexachlorobenzene (HCB) into the environment. HCB is a highly persistent toxin that degrades slowly in the air, enabling it to travel long distances in the atmosphere.

Shah noted that any violation of garbage burning regulations would lead to immediate consequences, including the sealing of the unit or kiln, imprisonment, fines of up to Rs100,000, and the initiation of legal proceedings against industrial unit or kiln owners. Furthermore, he emphasized that brick manufacturing is only permitted using the new eco-friendly zigzag technology.

Implementing structural reforms key to stimulate sustainable growth: BMP

ISLAMABAD (INP): The Businessmen Panel (BMP) of Federation of Pakistan Chambers of Commerce & Industry (FPCCI) has stressed the need for implementing structural reforms for good governance, curbing unproductive state expenditures, expanding the tax base, fostering public-private partnerships, and reallocating resources to critical sectors to stimulate sustainable growth, as the country is facing with daunting economic challenges, posing a serious threat to the viability of the industry.

Chairman BMP and former president FPCCI Mian Anjum Nisar observed that it was imperative to understand that fiscal discipline cannot be achieved and sustained without initiating structural reforms. He said that the government in the 2023 budget extended substantial subsidies and grants to loss-making entities, which, in turn, were not only failing to make positive contribution but were also incurring significant losses. We must maintain fiscal discipline and establish controls to create fiscal space to extend relief to the masses.

Quoting the reports, the business leader said that the budget deficit continues to grow, entangling Pakistan in an unrelenting cycle of debt. Even if we exclude the impact of debt servicing, our revenues fall short of covering other expenses, implying that all these were met from borrowed funds. At the close of the fiscal year (FY) 2022-23, Pakistan recorded a budget deficit of Rs 6.52 trillion, equivalent to 7.7% of the GDP, a slight decrease from the previous year's 7.9% of GDP. However, in absolute figures, the budget deficit surged by a substantial 24%, or Rs 1.26 trillion, within just one year.

Afghanistan trade surges as Taliban clamp down on heroin, UN report

NEW YORK (Online): Methamphetamine trafficking in and around Afghanistan has surged in recent years, even as the Taliban have curbed heroin trafficking since taking power, a United Nations report said on Sunday.

"The surge in methamphetamine trafficking in Afghanistan and the region suggests a significant shift in the illicit drug market and demands our immediate attention," said Ghada Waly, executive director of the United Nations Office of Drugs and Crime (UNODC).

The Taliban, who regained power in August 2021, announced a ban on the production of narcotics in Afghanistan, the world's main opium producer. Taliban officials say its security forces are clamping down on Afghan poppy farmers and destroying crops.

While heroin trafficking has slowed, the UNODC said in a statement, meth trafficking "has intensified since the ban".

Meth seizures in and around Afghanistan jumped 12-fold in the five years through 2021. Between 2019 and 2022, nearby countries such as Iran and Pakistan also reported increased seizures. Countries as far away as France and Australia have reported seizing methamphetamine that likely originated in Afghanistan, it said.

The UNODC said much of the meth from Afghanistan was made with pre-cursor ingredients such as those found in some cold and flu medication.

Afghanistan is home to the ephedra plant, which can be used to make methamphetamine, but the UNODC said the quantities needed to produce the drug and the risk of unreliable crops meant that Afghanistan's production did not depend on the plant alone.

"Common cold medications and industrial-grade chemicals are more efficient and cost effective for the manufacture of methamphetamine and thus pose a far bigger threat," the UNODC said.

Distinction b/w filer and non-filer must be abolished: PIDE Conference

Independent Report ISLAMABAD: The Pakistan Institute of Development Economics (PIDE) Macro Policy Lab recently hosted the "Fixing Fiscal Policy" Round Table Conference in Islamabad. The event addressed the persistent challenge of fiscal indiscipline in Pakistan and sought to chart a visionary path for the nation's fiscal policy.

In his introductory remarks, Dr. Nasir Iqbal, Associate Prof. and Chief of Macro-Policy Lab, PIDE said that the Round Table Conference, "Fixing Fiscal Policy," aims to unite policymakers and thought leaders to foster collaboration and develop local solutions in the fiscal framework of Pakistan. By bringing together academia and policymakers, we seek to chart a visionary path of fiscal policy in Pakistan for the future, transcending occasion Dr. Nadeem ul Haque, VC PIDE said that three things need to be focused on for the fixation of fiscal policy.

Firstly, the role of the government is crucial in accountability. This includes how to collect taxes, how to spend them, and where to allocate funds. Lastly, debt management is also an important aspect that requires attention.

Dr. Ashfaq Hasan Khan, Principal of the School of Social Sciences & Humanities, NUST while speaking at the roundtable meeting said that to address economic challenges, it is important to immediately reset the role of the government from being an active player to a facilitator. This would involve eliminating the current regulation-based regime and transitioning towards a rule-based economy. The use of a regulatory guillotine would help in the elimination of unnecessary No Objection Certificates (NOCs). A rule-based approach, coupled with monitoring and evaluation, would ensure a more efficient and effective economic system.

G20 summit wraps up in New Delhi; Macron says it confirms isolation of Russia

Monitoring Desk
NEW DELHI: The G20 summit in New Delhi ended on Sunday as India handed over the bloc presidency to Brazil, while both the US and Russia praised a consensus that did not condemn Moscow for the war in Ukraine but called on members to shun the use of force.

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi asked the group's leaders to hold a virtual meeting in November to review progress on policy suggestions and goals announced at the weekend.

"It is our responsibility to look at the suggestions that have been made to see how progress can be accelerated," he said in a statement.

On Saturday, the group adopted a Leaders' Declaration that avoided condemning Russia for the war but highlighted the human suffering the conflict had caused and called on all states not to use force to grab territory.

The consensus came as a surprise. In the weeks leading to the summit, sharply differing views on the war had threatened to derail the meeting, with Western nations demanding members call out Moscow for the invasion and Russia saying it would block any resolution that did not reflect its position.

Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov, the head of the Russian delegation, said the summit was a success for India as well as the Global South, the world's developing countries.

The Global South's position in the talks helped prevent the G20 agenda from being overshadowed by Ukraine, he told a press conference. "India has truly consolidated G20 members from the Global South."

White House national security adviser Jake Sullivan told reporters the summit declaration "does a very good job of standing up for the principle that states cannot use force to seek territorial acquisition or to violate the territorial integrity and sovereignty or political independence of other states".

Germany and Britain have also praised the resolution, but Ukraine said "it was nothing to be proud of".

French President Emmanuel Macron said on Sunday that the G20, which was founded to solve international economic issues, was not necessarily the place to expect diplomatic progress on the war in Ukraine.

Biden says Vietnam deal is about global stability, not containing China

Monitoring Desk

HANOI: President Joe Biden insisted Sunday that he is not trying to start a "cold war" with China as he made his first visit to Vietnam, saying his goal is to provide stability around the world by building U.S. ties with Vietnam and other Asian countries.

"We have an opportunity to strengthen alliances around the world to maintain stability. That's what this trip is all about," Biden said at a news conference. "It's not about containing China. It's about having a

president came to Hanoi as Vietnam is elevating the United States to its highest diplomatic status as a comprehensive strategic partner, evidence of how far the relationship has evolved from what Biden referred to as the "bitter past" of the Vietnam War.

The expanded partnership reflected a broader effort across Asia to counter China's influence as Biden has said Vietnam wants to show its independence and U.S. companies want an alternative to Chinese factories. But Biden is pursuing these agreements while simultaneously trying to cool any tensions with China.

Biden, meeting earlier Sunday with Vietnam's leaders, welcomed the two countries' new partnership and said he hoped progress could be made on climate, the economy and other issues during his 24-hour visit to Hanoi. "We can trace a 50-year arc of progress between our nations from conflict to normalization to this new elevated status."

Russian, Chinese officials attend North Korea anniversary parade

Monitoring Desk

SEOUL: North Korea marked its founding anniversary with a parade attended by leader Kim Jong Un as well as Russian diplomats and a high-ranking Chinese delegation, state media said on Saturday, as Pyongyang deepens ties with Moscow and Beijing.

Kim met with the visiting Chinese delegation led by Liu Guozhong, vice-premier of the State Council, the second such visit by top officials from Beijing in six weeks. The two sides announced their aims of "further intensifying the multi-faceted coordination and cooperation" between the two countries, according to a separate KCNA report. Russian diplomats also attended the event, as well as a Russian military song-and-dance ensemble which had arrived in Pyongyang to mark the occasion, KCNA reported.

Moscow expanded its official presence in North Korea shortly before the parade, with its Pyongyang embassy saying this week that it had been allowed to bring in 20 diplomatic and technical staff — the first such rotation of personnel since 2019.

Putin discusses Niger crisis with Malian leader-Kremlin

Monitoring Desk

MOSCOW: Russian President Vladimir Putin on Sunday held a phone call with the interim leader of Mali, Assimi Goita, and discussed topics including anti-terrorism efforts and the crisis in Mali's neighbour Niger, the Kremlin said in a statement. According to the statement, the two leaders agreed that the crisis in Niger, where a July coup ousted President Mohamed Bazoum, could only be resolved by diplomatic means. Israeli delegation attends UN heritage conference in Saudi Arabia in first public visit by officials

Monitoring Desk

JERUSALEM: An Israeli delegation arrived in Saudi Arabia on Sunday to attend a U.N. conference on world heritage sites, in the first public visit by government officials to the kingdom, an Israeli official said.

The delegation is led by the head of Israel's Antiquities Authority, Eli Escusido, and includes diplomats, the official said. It is not a bilateral visit, and it was unclear whether they would meet with Saudi officials.

The official was not authorized to discuss the matter with media and spoke on condition of anonymity. The official noted that Israel took part in a video game competition in Saudi Arabia earlier this year.

The visit comes as Washington is pushing to broker normalization of relations between Israel and Saudi Arabia, which are believed to have quietly cultivated ties in recent years over their shared suspicion of Iran. A formal agreement would be a historic step toward integrating Israel into the wider region, but it faces major challenges.

Japan says swarms of tourists defiling sacred Mt Fuji

Monitoring Desk

FUJIYOSHIDA: On a grey, rainy Saturday a steady stream of four buses arrive at a base station of Japan's Mount Fuji depositing dozens of lightly dressed foreign tourists in front of souvenir shops and restaurants. The scene evokes a theme park image, not the veneration most Japanese would expect below the 3,776-metre (12,388 ft) mountain worshipped as sacred by the Japanese, and a source of pride for its perfectly symmetrical form.

"Hey, no smoking here!" a souvenir store attendant barked, addressing a man dressed in shorts and holding a can of beer in front of the red 'torii' gate symbolising the entrance to the Shinto shrine up ahead.

Mt Fuji, which straddles Yamanashi and Shizuoka prefectures in eastern Japan, has always been popular with local and overseas tourists. But a recent surge in inbound tourists to Japan has led to extreme levels of pollution and other strains, authorities say, adding they may be forced to take drastic measures such as restricting the number of visitors.

Scientist shocks peers by 'tailoring' climate study

Monitoring Desk

PARIS: In a controversial bid to expose supposed bias in a top journal, a US climate expert shocked fellow scientists by revealing he tailored a wildfire study to emphasise global warming.

While supporters applauded Patrick T. Brown for flagging what he called a one-sided climate "narrative" in academic publishing, his move surprised at least one of his co-authors — and angered the editors of leading journal Nature.

Climate activists block Dutch motorway in major protest

Monitoring Desk

THE HAGUE: Climate change activists blocked a major motorway in The Hague on Saturday in a protest against Dutch fossil fuel subsidies, the latest high-profile action by the Extinction Rebellion group that attracted several thousand demonstrators. Police deployed water cannon against some of the activists, who have threatened a permanent blockade of the motorway, vowing to "stay or come back every day" until fossil fuel subsidies are dropped. Many protesters had come equipped with umbrellas and donated bathing suits or waterproof coats in preparation for the police water cannons.

Excluding Russia from grain deal talks will not be sustainable, Erdogan says

Monitoring Desk

NEW DELHI: Any initiative to revive the Black Sea grain deal that isolates Russia is not likely to be sustainable, Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan said in a press briefing after the conclusion of the G20 summit in New Delhi on Sunday.

Russia quit the deal in July, a year after it was brokered by the United Nations and Turkey, complaining that its own food and fertiliser exports faced obstacles and insufficient Ukrainian grain was going to countries in need.

Russia, Ukraine and Turkey are going to continue to discuss the grain deal, Erdogan added.

Russia is willing to send free grain to poorer countries, which Turkey favours, he told reporters, adding that Qatar had also agreed.

Erdogan said he was not "hopeless" about reviving the grain deal.

The Turkish president also held talks with Japanese Prime Minister Fumio Kishida at the sidelines of the G20 summit regarding efforts to revive the deal, two sources with knowledge of the matter said, without giving further details.

Russia carries out overnight drone attack on Ukrainian capital

Monitoring Desk

KYIV: Russia fired nearly three dozen drones at Kyiv early on Sunday, with blasts ringing out across the Ukrainian capital and the surrounding region for around two hours and debris falling across several city districts, Ukrainian officials said.

Ukraine's air force said the military destroyed 26 out of 33 drones launched by Russia, all of which targeted Kyiv and the region around it.

Reuters witnesses heard at least five explosions across Kyiv, where the nighttime sky was illuminated by blasts from air defences engaging the targets. A plume of smoke rose from in between buildings.

Kyiv resident Liudmyla said she heard the buzzing of the Iranian-made drones before a blast wave shattered windows in her building and the jars on her windowsill. "It was a very frightening experience - I can't even put it into words." Fragments from downed drones fell on five different districts, said Mayor Vitali Klitschko and the city's military administration. Klitschko said one person had been injured.

The state emergency service later reported that debris had fallen in three districts but that there was no serious damage.

Kyiv region Governor Ruslan Kravchenko wrote on Facebook that an unspecified infrastructure facility and eight houses had been damaged as a result of the overnight strikes.

There was no immediate comment from Russia about the attacks. Moscow has conducted regular air strikes on Ukrainian population centres far from the eastern and southern front lines of its 18-month-old invasion.

A Russian attack killed 17 people on Wednesday in the eastern city of Kostiantynivka, Ukrainian officials said.

Niger military accuses France of deploying forces with eye to 'intervention'

Monitoring Desk

NIAMEY: Niger's coup leaders have accused France of gathering forces, war materials and equipment in several neighbouring West African countries with a view to "military intervention".

Relations with France, Niger's former colonial power, degraded after Paris stood by ousted president Mohamed Bazoum following the July coup. "France continues to deploy its forces in several ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) countries as part of preparations for an aggression against Niger, which it is planning in collaboration with this community organisation," Niger's regime spokesman Colonel Major Amadou Abdramane said on Saturday. The Sahel state is also embroiled in a standoff with the West African bloc ECOWAS, which has threatened to intervene militarily if diplomatic pressure to return Bazoum to office fails.

In his statement, Abdramane said France had deployed military aircraft, helicopters and 40 armoured vehicles to Cote d'Ivoire and Benin. "Military cargo aircraft have enabled large quantities of war material and equipment to be unloaded in Senegal, Cote d'Ivoire and Benin, to name but a few," he added.

On August 3, Niger's coup leaders renounced several military cooperation agreements with France, which has about 1,500 soldiers stationed in the country as part of a wider fight against jihadists.

Paris, which refuses to recognise the military regime in Niger, does not consider the soldiers who overthrew the president as party to those cooperation deals. The military regime meanwhile maintains France's forces are now "illegally" stationed in Niger.

On Tuesday, a Paris defence ministry source told AFP that the French army was in talks with the military regime over withdrawing "elements" of its presence in Niger, confirming comments made the previous day by the Niger's regime-appointed Prime Minister Ali Mahaman Lamine Zeine.

Every day for more than a week, thousands of people have gathered in the Nigerien capital Niamey around a military base housing French soldiers to demand their departure.

Trudeau intends to take up 'Indian interference' with Modi

Monitoring Desk

VANCOUVER: Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau intends to address concerns of 'foreign interference', including those related to India during the G20 summit. However, it's uncertain how Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi will respond.

Canada has publicly accused India of 'foreign interference' in Canadian affairs, based on intelligence provided by Canadian intelligence authorities that the Indian state is involved in interference in Canada where nearly a million Sikhs reside and a large number of them are considered pro-Khalistan and anti-Hindutva.

Trudeau's visit comes in the wake of a petition brought by the Canadian Sikh community, urging a comprehensive investigation into the recent assassination of Sikhs For Justice (SFJ) and Khalistan Referendum's Canadian chapter leader Hardeep

Singh Nijjar and the potential involvement of Indian foreign elements.

Trudeau's arrival in New Delhi coincides with the G20 summit, where climate issues, security, gender equality, and the Russian invasion in Ukraine are prominent topics.

Trudeau, whose government has now approved a public inquiry into allegations of foreign interference, is also concerned about this issue. In Singapore, he mentioned that his schedule was being finalised, and a meeting with Modi in India had not been confirmed.

Trudeau, whose Liberal government recently launched a public inquiry into foreign interference allegations, also stressed the importance of scrutinising countries beyond just China.

He stated: "We must remain committed to protecting Canadians from any and all forms of interference."

Zelensky dismisses compromise with Putin, pointing to Prigozhin's death

Monitoring Desk

KYIV: Ukraine's President Volodymyr Zelensky has said the death of Yevgeny Prigozhin — the Russian mercenary leader whose plane crashed weeks after he led a mutiny against Moscow's military leadership — shows what happens when people make deals with Russian leader Vladimir Putin.

As Ukraine's counter-offensive moves into a fourth month, with only modest gains to show so far, Zelensky told CNN's Fareed Zakaria he rejected suggestions it was time to negotiate peace with the Kremlin.

"When you want to have a compromise or a dialogue with somebody, you cannot do it with a liar," Volodymyr Zelensky said. He said when Putin understood that a big part of society supported Prigozhin, "he killed him. But before he killed, he gave him promises, the territory of Belorussia (Belarus), gave him new locations, the Africa issues and businesses, a lot of different things."

The Wagner leader's dramatic death, which followed a short-lived rebellion that threatened the authority of the Russian president, was a warning to be heeded, Zelensky suggested. While the United States and other key Ukrainian allies continue to supply weapons to Kyiv, and stress that conditions to pursue a "just and durable" peace are not yet in place, a handful of world leaders, such as Brazil's Lula Da Silva, have put the onus on Ukraine to end the war.

Japan PM Kishida says he plans cabinet reshuffle, economic measures

"I'm thinking of conducting a personnel change of party leadership and of the cabinet as early as the 13th," Kishida told a press conference in New Delhi on Sunday, on the sidelines of a G20 summit meeting.

Kishida, who said last month he planned to compile a package of economic measures in September, told the press conference that he aimed to draw up comprehensive steps.

Musk's X sues over having to post moderation policies

Monitoring Desk

SAN FRANCISCO: Elon Musk's X Corp on Friday sued the state of California over a law requiring social media companies to publicly post their policies regarding hate speech, disinformation, harassment and extremism.

The parent company of X, formerly known as Twitter, argued in a federal suit that the law referred to as AB 587 violates its free speech rights.

"The true intent of AB 587 is to pressure social media platforms to eliminate certain constitutionally-protected content viewed by the State as problematic," the suit contended.

"The state is compelling social media companies to take public positions on controversial and politically charged issues."

UN envoy urges donor support for battered Syria facing an economic crisis

Monitoring Desk

DAMASCUS: The United Nations special envoy for Syria Sunday urged donors not to reduce their funding as the war-torn country's economic crisis spirals.

Syrian President Bashar Assad's decision last month to double public sector wages and pensions further skyrocketed inflation and fueled ongoing protests that shook the southern Druze-majority province of Sweida and nearby Daraa.

Initially sparked by deepening economic misery, angry residents in greater numbers began to call for the fall of Assad, similar to that of the country's 2011 uprising that turned into an all-out civil war.

The U.N. estimates that 90% of Syrians in government-held areas live in poverty and that over half the country's population struggles to put food on the table.

As the conflict, now in its 13th year, reached a stalemate Syrian government reclaimed large swathes of lost territory with the help of its key allies in Russia and Iran in recent years.

With international donor support dwindling, U.N. agencies have been cutting programs due to budget cuts for years. The U.N. estimates that some 300,000 civilians died during the first decade of the uprising, while half of the pre-war population of 23 million were displaced. "The situation inside of Syria has become even worse than it was economically during the height of the conflict," U.N. special envoy for Syria, Geir Pedersen, told reporters in Damascus following a meeting with Syrian Foreign Minister Faisal Mekdad.

Mushaal asks G20 to focus on ending HR abuses in IIOJK

Demands to press India to settle Kashmir dispute

ISLAMABAD (APP): Special Assistant to Prime Minister on Human Rights and Women Empowerment Mushaal Hussain Mullick has urged the G20 countries to use the opportunity to force the worst human rights violations in the Indian Illegally Occupied Jammu and Kashmir (IIOJK) and ensure a lasting solution to the Kashmir dispute.

Mushaal, the wife of incarcerated Hurriyat Leader Yasin Malik, in a statement on Sunday pressed the G20 member countries, including US, UK, EU, China, France, Russia, Canada, Japan, Saudi Arabia, South Africa and Türkiye to play their proactive role to resolve the Kashmir dispute because regional peace could not be possible without settlement of the issue.

She stressed that the international community should look at the ongoing human rights violations and massacres of innocent people instead of looking at their trade interests with India.

Mushaal demanded that the G-20 countries should make all political and social relations with India subject to the end of ongoing human rights violations in the occupied valley.

"Let's say you had no G-20 statement, headlines would say G-20 is finished, G-20 could be replaced by blocs like BRICS and G-7. So in a way by having a statement we keep the platform and the organisation alive," she said.

The SAPM said the Indian fascist government crossed all limits of barbarism and state terrorism and the world powers were well-aware of the fact that the occupied valley was turned into a largest open prisoner and torture cell.

She said many of the political figures, human rights defenders and journalists, including Yasim Malik, the Chairman Jammu and Kashmir Liberation Front (JKLF), prominent political figures Shabbir Ahmad Shah, Farooq Dar and Khurram Parvez, the Program Coordinator of the Jammu and Kashmir Coalition of Civil Society (JKCCS) and the Chairperson of the Asian Federation Against Involuntary Disappearances (AFAD) and Irfan Meraj (journalist/human rights activist) were illegally detained in frivolous, bogus and politically motivated cases.

Mushaal said the notorious occupation authorities unleashed a reign of terror and used the rapes of women as the weapon of war, besides committing the worst war crimes.

Rescuers hunt for survivors of Morocco quake with over 2,000 dead

Monitoring Desk
MARRAKECH: Rescuers searched on Sunday for survivors of Morocco's deadliest earthquake in more than six decades, with more than 2,000 people killed by the disaster that has laid waste to villages in the mountains outside Marrakech.

Many people spent a second night in the open after the 6.8 magnitude quake hit late on Friday. Relief workers face the challenge of reaching the most badly affected villages in the High Atlas, a rugged mountain range where settlements are often remote and where many houses crumbled.

Large chunks of a cliff had broken off and fallen on the road near the small town of Moulay Brahim, partly blocking a winding road connecting Marrakech to the Atlas Mountains. The latest Interior Ministry figures put the death toll at 2,012, with 2,059 people injured, including 1,404 in critical condition.

Morocco has declared three days of mourning and King Mohammed VI called for prayers for the dead to be held at mosques across the country on Sunday.

The World Health Organization said more than 300,000 people have been affected by the disaster.

"The next 24 to 48 hours will be critical in terms of saving lives," Caroline Holt, global director of operations for the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, said in a statement.

Search and rescue efforts would be prioritised alongside making sure survivors were taken care of, she said, noting the importance of providing safe drinking water.

The village of Tansghart in the Ansi area, on the side of a valley where the road from Marrakech rises up into the High Atlas, was the worst hit of several visited by Reuters journalists on Saturday.

Its picturesque houses, clinging to a steep hillside, were cracked open by the shaking ground. Those still standing were missing chunks of wall or plaster. Two mosque minarets had fallen.

Abdellatif Ait Bella, a labourer, lay on the ground, barely able to move or speak, his head bandaged from wounds caused by falling debris.

"We have no house to take him to and have had no food since yesterday," said his wife Saida Boudchich, fearing for the future of their family of six with their sole breadwinner so badly hurt.

Pak-UAE to sign free trade agreement by September end

ISLAMABAD (INP): Caretaker Federal Minister for Commerce, Industries, and Production Dr Gohar Ejaz said that the South Asian country was expected to sign a free trade agreement (FTA) with the United Arab Emirates (UAE) during the upcoming visit of an Emirati delegation in the last week of September.

It is worth mentioning here that the UAE is Pakistan's third-largest trade partner after China and the United States. It is also viewed as an ideal export destination by policymakers in the South Asian country due to its geographical proximity to Pakistan which reduces transportation and freight costs. The Gulf country is also home to an estimated 1.8 million Pakistani expatriates and after Saudi Arabia, the second-largest source of remittances for the South Asian nation of more than 240 million.

"Emirates delegation is planned for end September to finalize the FTA between Pakistan and UAE," Ejaz said, adding the visit would be focused on trade, investment, and economy, Arab News reported.

Pakistan's ambassador to the UAE, Faisal Niaz Tirmizi, said both nations were optimistic about signing the agreement, officially known as the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA), during the upcoming visit. "There are some issues which are being negotiated and we would like to finalize the deal when they come," Tirmizi said.

The UAE had already signed FTAs with around nine countries and was working with Pakistan on it, according to the ambassador.
