Govt to come up with solution for inflated electricity bills: PM

Says caretaker Govt trying to resolve electricity bills issue without defiance of IMF agreements

ISLAMABAD (APP): Prime Minister Anwaar-Haq Kakar Thursday said the government minutely looked into the problem of inflated electricity bills and would come up with a solution within next 48 hours.

Talking to senior journalists and news anchors here on the current challenging economic conditions, he said the government was considering various options to provide relief to the people.

The people had protested against increased electricity bills and the government realized their problems, he added.

To a question, he clarified that the Pakistan army, navy and air force were not using a single free unit of electricity and their bills were paid from the allocated financial budget.

While employees of WAPDA were using free electricity units and their usage would be rationalized, especially of the higher grade officers some of them were getting huge quantity of free electricity, he added.

He said perception should not be that the government would take any strict measures causing difficulties for the people.

He pointed out that the power sector had been a very challenging issue since the 1990s and the governments of that time signed agreements with independent power producers to overcome loadshedding which proved costly for consumers.

Over the years, he said, the generation and transmission system of electricity was flawed and the government had to deal with serious issues of line losses, power theft, high circular debt, use of expensive imported fuel and capacity payments to electricity companies.

"These issues cannot be ignored by just closing eyes. We need to diagnose treatment for the disease."

He made it clear that the government would fulfill its agreements with the international financial institutions.

He lamented that the country was faced with economic stagnation and there was less investment in sectors like manufacturing, real estate and stock exchange, and the trend was to only take up profit from certain businesses.

He said the caretaker government was formed for the continuity of constitutional order, and was dealing with economic and security challenges.

Health minister calls on President Alvi

ISLAMABAD (APP): Caretaker Federal Minister for National Health Services Regulations and Coordination, Dr Nadeem Jan called on President Dr Arif Alvi here on Thursday and discussed matters relating to national health in the country.

The president emphasized special focus on issues of breast cancer, growing population and mental health in the country.

President Alvi and the minister discussed the proposals regarding nutrition, rehabilitation of differently abled persons, and mental and physical weakness among the children.

The president stressed the need to provide consultation facilities to improve mental health in the country.

He said the basic treatment of mental health could be provided with the help of modern technology, Artificial Intelligence and Chatbot.

Pak, Iran for enhancing economic, trade ties

ISLAMABAD (APP): Iranian Deputy Minister for Economics and Finance Reza Bakhshi Thursday called on Acting Secretary of the Ministry of Economic Affairs Humair Karim and discussed cooperation between Pakistan and Iran, with a focus on enhancing economic ties for the mutual benefit of both countries.

Karim extended a warm welcome to Bakhshi and underscored Pakistan's commitment to nurturing the historic and amicable relations shared between the two neighboring countries. He expressed Pakistan's desire to strengthen these relations further, fostering increased trade and economic opportunities.

The acting secretary appreciated the substantial progress achieved following the 21st Joint Economic Committee (JEC) meeting held between Pakistan and Iran in August 2022. Both sides agreed to hold bilateral talks and follow-up meetings to implement the decisions made during the 21st JEC and prepare for the 22nd JEC to be held in Iran.

During the course of proceedings, the CJP said that the top court would act whenever the constitution was violated. The review appeal could not be accepted in current circumstances and therefore, it was being terminated, he said. The chief justice observed that the chief justice observed that the ECP was of the view that it could hold elections if funds and security were provided, but now it was saying that the polls were not possible due to some certain reasons.

SC dismisses review plea against order for elections in 90 days of assembly dissolution

ISLAMABAD (APP): The Supreme Court of Pakistan on Thursday dismissed a review petition of the Election Commission of Pakistan (ECP) against the verdict for holding elections within 90 days of the dissolution of Punjab Assembly. The three-member SC bench headed by Chief Justice of Pakistan Umar Ata Bandial and comprising Justice Ijaz ul Ahsan and Justice Munib Akhtar announced the verdict after hearing arguments from the respondents.

During the course of proceedings, the CJP said that the top court would act whenever the constitution was violated. The review appeal could not be accepted in current circumstances and therefore, it was being terminated, he said. The chief justice observed that the chief justice observed that the ECP was of the view that it could hold elections if funds and security were provided, but now it was saying that the polls were not possible due to some certain reasons.

Caretakers jack up petrol price by over Rs. 14 to take it past 300-mark

Monitoring Desk

ISLAMABAD: As the nation grapples with high electricity bills, the caretaker government late Thursday jacked up the petrol and diesel prices by over Rs14.

The Finance Division said the hike was due to the "increasing trend of petroleum prices in the international market and exchange rate variations".

The local currency is at an all-time low following an easing in import restrictions that has increased the greenback's demand and rising risks associated with financing the country's current account deficit.

The rupee has lost over Rs15 in the inter-bank market since the formation of the caretaker government which is tasked with overseeing at least one review of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) $3 billion standby arrangement; and steering the country through to a national election that is in theory due to take place by November.

Bugti seeks briefing to cope smuggling of goods

ISLAMABAD (APP): Caretaker Interior Minister Sarfraz Bugti on the directions of Prime Minister Anwar ul Haq Kakar on Thursday sought a briefing from provincial governments on the stoppage of smuggling of goods.

The minister was chairing a meeting regarding anti-smuggling measures here. Secretary Interior Abdullah Khan Sumbul, Director General Federal Investigation Agency (FIA) Mohsin Hassan Butt and officials from the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR), ministries and provincial offices participated in the meeting.

Minister Bugti stressed the need to make a comprehensive plan to curb the smuggling of fertilizers and sugar from the country.

The smuggling of necessary items including sugar and fertilizers from the country is burdening the economy, said the minister adding that the price hike due to the smuggling of goods is creating troubles for the common man.

He said cross-border smuggling of basic items of necessity will not be tolerated, adding that action may be initiated against those involved in illegal smuggling and their facilitators.

He directed for establishment of joint check posts and patrolling systems completely active and vigilant with the collaboration of federal and provincial departments.

Federal and provincial governments will work together to curb the smuggling of basic goods, said the minister adding that the border control system will have to be made more effective and inter-provincial movements will be strictly monitored.

CEO of Islamic Relief meets Chairman Senate

ISLAMABAD (APP): Chairman Senate Muhammad Sadiq Sanjrani Thursday appreciated Islamic Relief's unwavering commitment to humanitarian efforts in Pakistan, particularly in the wake of the floods that wreaked havoc across the country.

Chairman Senate during a meeting with CEO of Islamic Relief Raja Waseem Ahmed emphasized the need for collaborative initiatives that address the unique challenges faced by these regions.

The chairman highlighted importance of focusing on the most vulnerable regions of Pakistan, urging a concentrated effort in impoverished areas such as Balochistan, said a news release issued here.

9 soldiers martyred, 5 injured in suicide attack in Bannu

ISPR says "such sacrifices of our brave soldiers further strengthen our resolve", vows to eliminate menace of terrorism

RAWALPINDI (APP): Nine soldiers of Pakistan Army on Thursday embraced martyrdom after a motorcycle-borne suicide bomber exploded himself while targeting a military convoy in general area Jani Khel of Bannu District in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa.

Among the nine soldiers Naib Subedar Sanobar Ali also embraced shahadat (martyrdom), while five soldiers were injured, an Inter Services Public Relations (ISPR) news release said.

The area was cordoned by the security forces and sanitization was being carried out to eliminate any terrorists found in the area.

"Security forces of Pakistan are determined to eliminate the menace of terrorism and such sacrifices of our brave soldiers further strengthen our resolve," the ISPR said.

Reacting to the terrorist incident, Caretaker Prime Minister Anwaar-ul-Haq Kakar said that he was "heartbroken" by the loss of nine "valiant soldiers" to a cowardly terrorist act that injured many.

"Such acts are utterly reprehensible. My thoughts are with the families of the martyred and injured. Pakistan stands resolute against such terrorism," the interim premier added.

Solangi takes notice of alleged torture, arrest of senior journalist from Swat

ISLAMABAD (APP): Caretaker Minister for Information and Broadcasting Murtaza Solangi has taken notice of the alleged torture and arrest of Fayyaz Zafar, a senior journalist from Swat. Discussing the incident with relevant authorities, he emphasized the importance of conducting an impartial investigation into the incident.

The caretaker federal minister of information has sought a report of the torture and arrest of Fayyaz Zafar, said a press release. He asserted that the authority of the office must not be employed to stifle the voice of journalists.

He affirmed his commitment to closely monitor the progress of Fayyaz Zafar's case. The Information Minister said the government firmly believed in freedom of expression and media, in accordance with the constitution.

Govt 'prepares' relief plan for electricity consumers

ISLAMABAD (INP): The caretaker government has suggested taking back the recent hike of Rs7 per unit in the basic tariff of electricity and doing the same phase-wise, later. Furthermore, Pakistan has also sought the IMF's nod to give installment facilities to electricity consumers. The Finance Ministry will give a guarantee to the international lender in writing for the collection of August and September's bills in installments, the sources said. Earlier on Wednesday, Caretaker Finance Minister Dr. Shamsad Akhtar ruled out room for additional subsidies within the International Monetary Fund (IMF) agreements.

From Karachi to Khyber, people belonging to various walks of life are protesting against soaring electricity bills.

Sources having knowledge of the development said Pakistan has shared the plan with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) in writing seeking Rs250 billion relief in electricity bills.

The plan has been prepared by keeping the consumers who use up to 400 electricity units, monthly, the sources said. Pakistan in its recommendations has suggested taking back the recent hike of Rs7 per unit in the basic tariff of electricity and doing the same phase-wise, later. Furthermore, Pakistan has also sought the IMF's nod to give installment facilities to electricity consumers. Beyond reason

The violation of fundamental rights — including the right to due process, to freedom of association and speech — across the country, is now beyond farce. There is not even the pretence of adhering to the law, only a relentless determination to erase all dissent through whatever means can be conjured up to illegally deprive recalcitrant individuals of their liberty, and to silence them.

Consider the travails of lawyer and vocal critic of enforced disappearances, Imaan Hazir Mazari. Her 'original sin', a fiery speech made at a PTM rally in Islamabad, has been used to file three FIRs against her. She was first arrested on multiple charges, including sedition, rioting and dacoity, etc — by law-enforcement personnel who reportedly barged into her residence in the early hours without an arrest warrant.

Granted post-arrest bail in one case, Ms Mazari was kept in custody until she obtained bail in the second one as well. Shortly after her release, she was rearrested outside the prison gates — this time on far-fetched allegations of 'terror financing' — an arrest that her lawyer has claimed violated the Islamabad High Court's orders.

Outspoken PTM leader Ali Wazir, arrested alongside Ms Mazari, is yet to be granted bail. The former South Waziristan MNA was an exception earlier for having been kept behind bars on various pretexts for over two years, despite being acquitted and granted bail several times. But post May 9, there is a sinister predictability to the pattern of repeated incarceration at the pleasure of the authorities.

Ms Mazari's mother, former PTI MNA Shireen Mazari, was subjected to the same until she announced she was leaving her party. Many other PTI leaders — including Shehryar Afridi, arrested an outrageous 10 times — have been made to go through this 'revolving door imprisonment', which makes a mockery of the courts. Those turning their backs on the party 'won' their freedom.

While PTI's lawyers are preoccupied with defending Imran Khan, the legal troubles of other party leaders — not to mention ordinary PTI supporters — are getting scant attention. Several of them are in the security establishment's custody and facing trials in military courts.

The Punjab caretaker government informed the Lahore High Court that the detainees are not allowed to meet their families or legal counsel of their choice. Are these foreign enemy agents or citizens of Pakistan?

The flagrant abuse of power being witnessed today leaves Pakistan looking like a country virtually unmoored from the universal principles of justice on which its Constitution and its international human rights obligations are based. One wonders whether the centres of power are cognisant of how this affects the country's global standing. Or is that not a priority in these times? As for the caretakers, pleading helplessness is not an option. They are complicit.

"A 50-year-old man presented with myalgia, headache, loss of energy and appetite. He has lost seven kilograms in the last five months. He is sad with weeping episodes. He has difficulty waking up early in the morning and has lost his concentration. He has two handicapped children, ages seven and five, both completely blind. He is always thinking about them."

The case above was reported by a doctor in Lower Dir last week after being trained to identify common mental disorders and offer pharmacological and psychosocial interventions in primary care. The training is part of a comprehensive, evidence-based and scalable model developed by the Ministry of Planning, Development & Special Initiatives

Closing the mental health gap

(MoPDSI). In collaboration with the health department, KP, and the International Medical Corps, over 50 primary care doctors and clinical psychologists have been trained in five districts across KP thus far. The trained staff is now connected to a web portal through a mobile application, which allows them to confidentially send in data and seek supervision from experienced mental health specialists.

The intervention, designed to build the capacity of healthcare providers by implementing Mental Health Gap Action Programme (mhGAP) guidelines, is recommended by the World Health Organisation as a key strategy to integrate mental health at the primary healthcare level to overcome the gigantic treatment gap that exists in countries like Pakistan.

Consider: there are an estimated 1.5 million people in Lower Dir. It is estimated that 300,000 (20 per cent) of them are likely to suffer from a common mental disorder. Like 26 other districts in KP, there is no qualified psychiatrist in Lower Dir. In a few of these districts, there are either self-proclaimed psychiatrists with no formal qualification, or those with minimal qualification (diploma/MCPS) after one or two years of training at most, and practising mainly in the private sector.

KP has 37 districts. Peshawar, like other major urban centres, has high specialist resources with at least a dozen qualified psychiatrists in the public sector and an even higher number in the private sector. Then there are nine other districts that have a teaching hospital with at least two qualified psychiatrists. These districts can be said to have a moderate level of specialist resources. As far as clinical psychologists in the public sector are concerned, there are no posts outside teaching hospitals. The indigenous burden of mental disorders in KP is compounded by security-related conflicts, economic crisis and climate hazards. The districts of Chitral and Kurram, for instance, are a troubling example of where high rates of suicide have been reported. Some parts of the province comprise a difficult terrain, which creates problems for residents to safely commute for accessing healthcare. The recent chairlift scare in Battagram is likely to induce severe post-traumatic reactions for affected families. But with a severe dearth of specialist resources and no existing services for mental health and psychosocial support (MHPSS) within the community, the only options for residents brave enough to seek help is to front the expenses and travel hundreds of miles for medical consultation in major cities, or resort to faith and faith healers.

It is not just the dearth of services but also the quality of care that is a concern. In our recent training workshops, it was evident that psychiatric practice, even in tertiary care hospitals, centres on a cursory biomedical approach. An average consultation lasts a few minutes, followed by a prescription heavily dictated by irrational polypharmacy. As is the case in the rest of the country, a powerful pharmaceutical industry seems to be subsidising these worrying trends.

Psychiatric outpatient clinics, both in the public and private sector, are overwhelmingly marked by throngs of despondent families, aspiring for scientific care but unlikely to get any. One example is the widespread practice of prescribing benzodiazepines (sleeping tablets), which are highly addictive. There is no regulatory system to check these practices. A particularly worrying case is that of a well-established institution in the province which offers in-patient care to a large number of patients supervised by unqualified staff — the ethics of which is highly disputable.

Across the province, the concept of psychological care barely exists. International humanitarian agencies have been investing in MHPSS services over the last few decades. These initiatives are project-based and time-limited, thereby unable to sustain or create any meaningful impact. Psychologists serving in these projects face job insecurity and few opportunities for supervision to strengthen their skills. Despite an alarming rise in the use of illicit substances, including methamphetamine crystals (ice), opioids, cannabis and alcohol, neither doctors nor psychologists are equipped to respond with basic psychosocial interventions. Worryingly, this gap is steadily being filled by unreliable commercial, often criminal, detoxification services.

Our experience of working with primary care physicians in KP showed that, depending on their parent institution, their knowledge and skills about mental disorders varies greatly. It is also not uncommon to find doctors who have graduated from Russia, China or Afghanistan with limited clinical skills. This is particularly challenging, unless the role of psychiatrists in the teaching units is redefined.

The MHPSS plan by the MoPDSI is designed to offer evidence-based trainings on a large scale, provide ongoing supervision to the trained doctors and collect valuable relevant data. This can help change the landscape of mental healthcare in the province. To scale up this intervention, a strong coordinating mechanism is needed where all available resources can be utilised in a meaningful way. -- Courtesy Dawn

Husain Haqqani

Pakistan is dangerously polarized. Pakistanis are divided between supporters and opponents of a charismatic leader deemed a messiah by his followers and a scary demagogue by his detractors. There are other critical divisions within society as well, not least of which is the divide between those seeking civilian supremacy and those more accepting of an expanded role for the military. Moreover, there is a longstanding ideological divide between those seeking greater Islamization, according to their own sectarian interpretations of Islam, and those aspiring for a tolerant homeland of Muslims run as a normal democracy. Ethnic cleavages between and within Pakistan's provinces have also existed for years as has the gap between the rich and the poor.

Given these cleavages, how likely is it that Pakistan can maintain its already weak semblance of democratic order before the powers that be proclaim that the rules of the political game need to be rewritten?

The last time the country witnessed similar polarization was in 1977. Then, after the March 1977 general election, opponents of the incumbent prime minister, Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, took to the streets to demand his resignation amid assertions of election rigging. These protests escalated into a violent campaign for an Islamic government, which in turn led to the imposition of martial law by General Ziaul Haq.

General Zia built upon the demands in the street for 'Nizam-e-Mustafa' to rule the country for the next ten years, claiming that he was Islamizing the country's legal and political system. But it was his initial two or three years in power that might offer a key to understanding how political irreconciliation can actually lead to greater authoritarian control. After the street violence by the Pakistan National Alliance

(PNA) had brought the country to a standstill for months, Zia argued that Pakistan needed breathing space without politics. In other words, the military was managing affairs of the state as a stop-gap arrangement so that the overheated political space could cool down.

Much has changed in Pakistan since 1977, of course. Some might argue that what worked 46 years ago cannot work again. The media and social media environments are vastly different today, as is the national view of the military's role as the final arbiter of the country's destiny. But it is important to remember that chaos and polarization are not effective tools for keeping the military out of politics. If anything, the failure of civilian institutions to function, for whatever reason, and the inability of politicians to compromise, paves the way for a greater not lesser military role in politics.

To state that polarization threatens democracy, even as it might add to a single politician's popularity, is not the same as deeming the breakdown of democracy as desirable. But it is important to remind everyone of the old maxim that describes democracy as a system wherein 'the majority has its way, and the minority gets its say.' If the majority has a tendency to be intolerant of the minority's right to have its say, as has often been the case in Pakistan, half of democracy's essence is denied. Once the minority figures out a way to deny the majority's right to have its way, the end of democracy arrives. Today, Pakistan seems to be witnessing both prongs of failure of democracy at work.

Democracy requires a civil opposition as much as a government limited by norms and rules, and Pakistan currently has neither. The judiciary is unable to resolve disputes because it is also polarized and has become politicized over the decades. Past experience suggests that recent developments have, at best, prolonged hybrid rule or, at worst, paved the way for another extra-constitutional intervention. Either way, the prospect of full democracy has been indefinitely postponed due to the polarized environment.

As a political system, democracy functions best in an environment of compromise and mutual respect. It requires adherence to the ethic of sport. Many parties and individuals contend for popular support, the winners form the government, and the losers sit in opposition, but only until the next round. Unfortunately, Pakistani politics functions under the ethic of war. One side sets out to vanquish the other and losers are seen as having no rights.

Democratic contestation for power should involve securing votes on the basis of contending policy ideas, not just appealing to sentiments of an emotive people.

If one side wants high taxes on the rich, for example, and the other seeks reduction in taxes after expanding economic activity, there is room for compromise and negotiation. But if political actors paint politics as a battle between good and evil, in which they represent good and the other side evil, then differences become irreconcilable.

The idea, drawn from religion, of political confrontation being a battle between Haq (eternal truth) and Baatil (eternal falsehood) in Pakistan's political sphere has made compromise impossible and has contributed to the diminished democratic space. But the current march to catastrophe is not inevitable. A grand national bargain, involving all political forces and the all-powerful army, could strengthen constitutional democracy.

The bargain would involve some consensus on three crucial areas — economics, foreign relations, and national security — and agreement on political rules of the game. Politicians would have to accede to working with one another instead of looking for covert deals to undermine each other.

"The honourable gentleman/lady from the other side" would have to be the preferred mode of address within parliament, instead of 'traitor,' 'crook,' 'thief,' or 'dacoit' at rallies.

Cooperation would have to replace confrontation and polarization. But will it happen soon enough to avoid the disaster that awaits Pakistani democracy? -- Courtesy TheNews

Grand national bargain, anyone?

Inflation and devaluation

Khurram Husain

For more than two and a half years now, at least, the country has been seeing relentless and unending pressure on the exchange rate and the price level. The present bout of exchange rate volatility began in May 2021 and has continued unabated since then. The dollar had moved around 150 to the rupee for two years until that month. Less than 30 months later, its value doubled versus the rupee, and still the pressure is refusing to subside. It took 10 years for the dollar to double in value from 75 to 150 rupees, from 2008 till 2019. It took less than two and a half years for it to double again from May 2021 till the present.

As the same time, inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index skyrocketed only a few months after May 2021, and rose relentlessly till our time, with a few interruptions along the way.

The question to ask is: what is driving this relentless surge for almost two and a half years now, punctuated with brief moments of what seems like stability? Why this persistent surge in pressure on prices over such a long period?

To find the answer, do a simple exercise. This gets a bit technical, so let me explain it first. Take the money supply projections contained in the IMF staff reports of April 2021, February 2022 and September 2022. Take the overall broad money supply, called M2, as well as the aggregates called Net Domestic Assets (NDA) and the Net Foreign Assets (NFA), and put the projections into an excel sheet. Underneath each of these projections, take the data reported by the State Bank for the same period, and calculate the difference between reality and projection.

The projection represents the path to stability. It tells us how the money supply and its aggregates need to move in order for the mounting external sector pressures on the economy to be dissipated. The real figures, reported by the State Bank, tell you what actually happened in reality. The difference — reality minus the projection — tells you how far the economy moved from its projected path to stability.

When you do this exercise, you will notice something. Overall, broad money growth remains more or less within a narrow band of where it is supposed to be. So far so good. But notice how the compositional aggregates are moving relative to where they are supposed to be. The IMF projected a certain level of money supply growth in each staff report. But in its projections, the bulk of the growth was supposed to come from rising NFAs, with NDAs either growing slowly (as per the April 2021 projection) or contracting slightly (as per the February 2022 projection).

In reality, the exact opposite happened. If you plot the difference (reality minus projection) you will notice that NFAs are falling sharply while NDAs are rising. This is the diametric opposite of what was envisioned in the projected path to stability. And this divergence not only continues in both periods covered by the April 2021 and February 2022 staff reports, it also aggravates. By the time of the September 2022 staff report, the difference between where we are supposed to be by programme end (Q4FY23) and where we actually are is so large that it is difficult to fathom how it is going to be rectified.

Now, look at the staff report for the latest Standby Arrangement. You will notice that the projections for the monetary aggregates do not even envision a path back to stability. All they do is arrest the deterioration. The previous three staff reports envisioned NFAs becoming positive within a quarter or two. In the SBA, they remain negative throughout the programme period. All that the government is being asked to do is to go into a holding pattern, arresting further deterioration in the money aggregates.

This is the crux of the matter. Serious malfunctions on the balance of payments and fiscal accounts are throwing the monetary aggregates far from their projected path to stability. This malignant movement in the monetary aggregates, in turn, is fueling inflation and exchange rate pressure. Endless rounds of devaluation are failing to arrest or dissipate the pressure, because the underlying movements keep producing more pressure even after every devaluation. It will take years, but it can still be done. The State Bank will have to build reserves by starving the interbank market of dollars, while the state will have to mobilise a massive tax effort the likes of which it has not done in decades. Or a fresh exogenous event that results in a new shower of foreign exchange coming upon us appears.

In the meantime, to get a sense of where things are moving, keep an eye on the broad money, NFAs and NDAs as they shape up, and see whether they are trending towards or away from the projection in the SBA. And best of luck to everyone! The scale of what is coming should not be underestimated. -- Courtesy Dawn

On disobedience

F.S. Aijazuddin

It began with Adam. John Milton blamed him for the world's woes in this fiery opening to his epic poem Paradise Lost: "Of Man's First Disobedience, and the Fruit/Of that Forbidden Tree, whose mortal taste/Brought Death into the World, and all our woe."

With woes, disobedience came with some compensating virtues. The playwright Oscar Wilde contended that "Disobedience ... is man's original virtue. It is through disobedience that progress has been made [and rebellion]."

A recent rebel — Edward Snowden of WikiLeaks fame — argued: "Sometimes to do the right thing, you have to break a law [.] You have to make sure that what you're risking, what you're bringing onto yourself, does not serve as a detriment to anyone else."

In Pakistan, disobedience is the fourth injunction, omitted from our national motto. Disobedience has become the new norm — whether to the laws of God, to the Constitution, to man-made laws, Rules of Business, or to the orders of a superior.

Hameed obeyed his chief's orders and left the ISI. To some, such independence of action constituted disobedience to a higher institutional authority.

More recently, the principal secretary to the president, Waqar Ahmed, questioned the orders signed by his employer for reversion to the Establishment Division. The dislodged principal secretary retaliated with a confidential letter, which, though marked 'For the Eyes of the President', somehow leaked into the media. In it, he complained: "The decision to surrender my services isn't based on justice." He urged the president to "initiate an investigation into the matter through the Federal Investigation Agency (FIA) or any relevant agency to uncover any misconduct", adding, with misplaced bravado, that he was "prepared to testify before the Supreme Court or any other court."

As if that disobedience was not bitter enough for the beleaguered president, Ms Humaira Ahmad, identified by the president as the replacement principal secretary, declined his offer even before orders for her transfer had been processed. President Arif Alvi will complete his five-year term on Sept 9, 2023. All too conscious of the shelf life of his constitutional powers, he invited the chief election commissioner, Sikandar Sultan Raja, to meet him for consultation on the next election date. The CEC declined, fobbing him off with the humiliating rebuff that in his "considered view, participation in the meeting would be of scant consequence."

However, the CEC did find the time the following day to meet the US ambassador Donald Blome to hear him pontificate on "the United States' support for free and fair elections conducted in accordance with Pakistan's laws and Constitution". Perhaps His Excellency detects a faint pulse in our Constitution and something still twitching in the laws of Pakistan that the Pakistani public no longer discerns. For them, the Constitution is no more than a perforated filigree of a once noble intent. Our laws, after 76 years of abuse and misuse, have become a discoloured Rubik's cube, manipulated by legislators, politicians and lawyers alike to yield meanings of their choice.

Disobedience is now endemic in Pakistan. Traffic rules are disobeyed. Tax laws are disobeyed. Jail manuals are disobeyed. Rules of Business are disobeyed. Orders in civilian ink and military khaki are disobeyed. Judicial orders, even up to the eminence of the Supreme Court, are disobeyed. And now, we see the tra-vesty of our president — the constitutional symbol of 240 million Pakis-tanis — reduced to the level of an ineffective supplicant, like "an old Arab prematurely blind, whom the caravan has left behind". Two hundred and fifty years ago, in April 1774, the British parliamentarian Edmund Burke warned his myopic colleagues in Westminster: "Reflect how you are to govern a people, who think they ought to be free [.] Your scheme ... yields nothing but discontent, disorder, disobedience."

In today's stygian gloom, where churches are desecrated, the homes of our Christian brethren torched and Bibles burned, it might serve as a palliative to recall St Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians in the New Testament: "Let no one deceive you with empty words, for because of these things the wrath of God comes upon the sons of disobedience." Those who arrogate to themselves control of the destiny of 240m Pakistanis should not ignore these words. They do so — at our peril. -- Courtesy Dawn

Madad terms quality education key to development of nation

KARACHI (APP): Caretaker Federal Minister for Education and Professional Training Madad Ali Sindhi, on Thursday, termed quality education as key to the development of any nation assured that the government will take every possible measure to further enhance the quality of teaching and research in universities.

The federal minister was chairing a meeting with vice-chancellors of public sector universities of Sindh at the Higher Education Commission's Regional Office Karachi. Chairman HEC Dr Mukhtar Ahmed was also present at the occasion.

In the brainstorming session on the improvement of the quality of higher education, vice chancellors of universities spoke in length on the performance of their universities, financial and other issues being faced and measures taken to deal with them and also presented suggestions for enhancement of quality of teaching and research in the higher education institutions.

Madad Ali Sindhi, addressing the occasion said that Prime Minister Anwar ul Haq Kakar has directed him to visit educational institutions to look into their issues and take measures for their resolution.

The minister said that he had conducted visits to schools in Islamabad and issued directives for resolving issues and now he was having a meeting with vice-chancellors of universities of Sindh.

All the issues including quality of education and shortage of resources were discussed in detail in the meeting and a series of engagements would continue he would also pay visits to the universities to review the situation and find solutions, the minister added.

Inviting suggestions from the vice-chancellors for improvements in higher education institutions, he said that universities were the highest places of learning and it was his basic responsibility to resolve the issues being confronted by them.

Chairman HEC, speaking at the occasion, said that universities in the country had complete autonomy in administrative and educational affairs but concepts of responsibility and accountability were also attached to it. HEC is responsible for setting and ensuring minimum standards for education and research in higher education institutes and providing guidance and resources for the purpose while it was also ensured that universities get their share in resources on the basis of prescribed criteria.

He said that universities could forward their recommendations for updating the curriculum and HEC would extend cooperation in this regard.

Vice-chancellors of different universities suggested that measures should be taken for the training of newly inducted teachers, improving teaching methodology, starting foundation semester for new students, establishing academia-industry linkage, focusing on ethical education, technology transfer, exchange programs of academia and scholars with foreign universities and preventing external pressures on university administration.

Pakistan Polio Programme launches next phase of female polio worker initiative

ISLAMABAD (APP): Women healthcare workers from the Pakistan Polio Programme met Melinda French Gates, co-chair of the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, in a virtual roundtable to share updates and launch the next phase of the 'Female Frontline Worker Co-Design Initiative'.

Participants shared their experiences from this initiative, which aims to systematically listen to and learn from female frontline workers to help solve final barriers to ending polio in Pakistan. They also shared their ideas and aspirations for the future, after Pakistan has successfully achieved this national goal, a news release on Thursday said.

has grown from participating in this initiative because it is so meaningful that the Polio Programme has taken the time to listen to our experiences and ideas, and that some of the solutions we proposed are being adopted to improve campaigns as well as our work experience," said one frontline worker.

"I'm so motivated to hear that we'll be supported by the programme in building up other skill sets so we can be ready for other opportunities after polio is gone."

Pakistan's National Emergency Operations Centre for Polio Eradication (NEOC) has approved select co-designed solutions from this process and will incorporate them into upcoming immunization campaigns, community engagement efforts, and other day-to-day operations this year.

Examples of approved recommendations include a revitalized training package on key topics requested by frontline workers, improved campaign tools and materials, and communication strategies that highlight the value of female polio workers.

In addition to implementing co-designed solutions to accelerate programmatic progress, the Pakistan Polio Programme will begin the next phase of this initiative by "upskilling" female polio workers in other capacities and helping them prepare for potential future opportunities after polio eradication.

The Minister of National Health Services Regulation & Coordination, Dr Nadeem Jan, also expressed the Government of Pakistan's commitment to supporting female polio health workers, including in exploring future livelihood pathways for a post-polio world.

"Polio health workers have served Pakistan with incomparable dedication. Whether braving extreme weather conditions or navigating volatile security situations, they have remained steadfast in their commitment," Dr. Jan said, adding, "It is our duty to not only appreciate their invaluable services but also ensure that this excellent workforce continues to contribute to the country after polio ends.

This is why the new phase of the Female Frontline Workers Initiative is very important for us to build their capacities in different areas and ensure they have good job opportunities in the future."

French Gates praised the initiative's progress and the programme's commitment to supporting female workers through the next phase of this work. "These women are the heart of the polio eradication programme and ensuring their expertise and solutions are at the centre of eradication efforts is critical," she said.

"This initiative will not only help ensure that every child can receive life-saving vaccines, but it will also give these women important skills and training to support other health ef-orts, and to pursue economic opportunities in the future."

French Gates also reinforced the foundation's longstanding commitment to ending polio in Pakistan and to working in partnership with the country to improve health and well-being nationwide.

The virtual roundtable served as a follow-up to French Gates's first meeting with female frontline workers in Pakistan last year. It was moderated by Anita Zaidi, President of Gender Equality at the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, and also included Dr Shumaila Rasool, a member of the programme's National Gender Working Group and the Sindh Emergency Operations Centre core team.
