GoB govt declares all-out war against terrorists

Jan Achakzai vows to take revenge of every martyr of Mastung carnage: We would go behind all those involved in the Mastung carnage including the masterminds, and would bring them to justice: Announces financial compensation of Rs. 1.5 for families of each martyr, Rs. 0.5 million for critical injured and Rs. 0.2 million for minor injured on behalf of interim provincial government

Independent Report
QUETTA: The caretaker Provincial Minister for Information, Jan Achakzai has categorically reiterated the government's pledge to take revenge of every martyr of the Mastung carnage.

He said that those involved in the planning, facilitation and masterminds of the Mastung suicide blast would not be spared anyway and as such they would be taken to task.

“We would go behind all those involved in the Mastung carnage including the masterminds, and would bring them to justice”, asserted the caretaker Minister Information while adressing a crowded press conference at the Sikandar Jamali Auditorium, Civil secretariat on Sunday afternoon.

Jan Achakzai said that the security plan is being revisited by removing the shortcomings.

He said that it is resolve of the state to go to any extreme for elimination of the terrorism.

He asserted that we would carry out intelligence base operation in every nook and corner to apprehend and eliminate terrorists.

Referring the recent visit of Chief of Army Staff (COAS), General Syed Asim Munir to the province, the caretaker Minister said that we welcome the resolve of COAS for elimination of terrorism in the country including province. He said that the Army chief condoled with the bereaved families of the martyrs and inquired about health of injured of Mastung carnage during his visit.

He said that the Army Chief also expressed the resolve to take revenge of every martyr of Mastung carnage.

He on the occasion announced on behalf of the interim government the financial compensation of Rs. 1.5 for families of each martyr, Rs. 0.5 million for critical injured and Rs. 0.2 million for minor injured of the Mastung carnage.

He said that the federal government would be approached for improving the economic compensation package for the martyrs and injured persons.

Jan Achakzai also said that the provincial government is active under leadership of Chief Minister, Mir Ali Mardan Domki and the province would be made hub of peace by taking stern action against those involved in terrorism or other law and order situation.

The Minister Information also paid homage to the martyrs of security forces and other law enforcement agencies on their sacrifices for the sake of country.

Mir Ali Mardan Khan Domki asserts no power of the world can't stop speedy development and prosperity under CPEC

Independent Report

QUETTA: The caretaker Chief Minister Balochistan, Mir Ali Mardan Khan Domki has reiterated his government's resolve to complete the ongoing and proposed projects under China-Pakistan Economic Corridor (CPEC) in the province.

This was stated by the Chief Minister in his message issued on eve of the national day of China on Sunday.

Mr. Domki said that the Chinese economic success is an example for the developing countries.

He said that the Pak-China friendship is time-tested, and it would strengthen further with passage of time. The caretaker Chief Minister said that the people of Pakistan give special importance to relations with China.

He said that the relations of Pakistan with China have promoted the strategic bonds between the two countries besides expanding the CPEC.

Referring his visit to Gwadar, the Chief Minister said that he directed the concerned authorities to expedite work on the ongoing projects under the CPEC.

He said that it is our utmost endeavour to make CPEC project fruitful soon for economic development of the country including Balochistan.

He said that the voices against the CPEC should know that these (CPEC) projects would not stop.

The Chief Minister mentioned that Pakistan was the first country of the world that had recognized China Republic as a sovereign country.

He said that China and Pakistan have same stance about the international matters, peace and mutual respect.

He asserted that no power of the world can't stop speedy development and prosperity under CPEC. This great journey is continued at a fast, and would remain continued in future as well, he maintained.

Attackers set off bomb at Turkish government building, both die

Monitoring Desk

ANKARA: Two attackers detonated a bomb in front of Turkish government buildings in Ankara on Sunday in an assault that left both of them dead and two police officers wounded, in what authorities called the capital's first terrorist attack in years.

CCTV footage obtained by Reuters showed a vehicle pulling up to the Interior Ministry's main gate and one of its occupants quickly walking toward the building before being engulfed in an explosion, while the other remains on the street.

The blast killed one of the terrorists and authorities “neutralised”, or killed, the other, the interior minister said of the incident that rattled a central district that is home to ministerial buildings and nearby parliament.

In a speech at the opening of a new parliamentary session hours later, President Tayyip Erdogan called the morning attack “the latest attempt” to inflict terror on Turks.

“Those who threaten the peace and security of citizens have not achieved their goals and never will,” he said.

A senior Turkish official told Reuters the attackers had hijacked the vehicle and killed its driver in Kayseri, a city 260km (161 miles) southeast of Ankara, before carrying out the attack. One of the injured officers suffered shrapnel injuries, he added. “Two terrorists came with a light commercial vehicle in front of the entrance gate of the General Directorate of Security of our Ministry of Internal Affairs and carried out a bomb attack,” Ali Yerlikaya, the interior minister, said on social media platform X.

He added the two officers were slightly injured in the incident at 9:30am (0630 GMT).

“Our struggle will continue until the last terrorist is neutralised,” he said, echoing condemnation by other Turkish officials.

Policeman martyred, two terrorists killed in attack on Mianwali patrolling post MIANWALI (INP): A police constable was martyred after a group of terrorists attacked a Punjab Highway Patrolling Post in Mianwali. A crossfire also left two terrorists dead and another severely injured. According to a Punjab Police spokesman, a group of more than 10 terrorists attacked Eisa Khel Kundal patrolling post in early hours.

An exchange of fire took place between the suspects and Punjab police officials who foiled an attempt of the suspects to enter the patrolling post's building. The firing left two suspects dead and PHP head constable Haroon Khan martyred. Khan suffered bullet wound in his eye. The spokesman further said the gun battle ensued for about four hours and PHP officials repulsed the attack.

Punjab police chief Dr Usman Anwar said the deceased suspects were involved in terrorists activities across the country. He said a hunt had been launched to trace the run-away suspects.

He said Punjab police along other security forces were fighting the terrorists, adding CTD has so far conducted 130 intelligence-based operations.

The Punjab police were put on high alert to protect life and property of the masses, the Punjab IG said. The IG left for Kundal in morning. He will attend the funeral of the martyred cop.

Massacre again

A day of celebration turned into a bloodbath in Mastung and Hangu, as terrorists attacked an Eid Miladun Nabi event in the Balochistan town and Friday prayers in the KP city. At the time these lines were being written, no group had claimed responsibility, while the interim interior minister had claimed that Indian intelligence was involved. Over 55 victims perished as a suicide bomber struck the Milad event in Mastung, while five victims were reported dead in the Hangu incident, also believed to be a suicide attack.

Up till a decade ago, Balochistan, specifically Quetta and Mastung, was in the grip of intense sectarian militancy carried out by Lashkar-i-Jhangvi. Mass casualty attacks occurred in the provincial capital, while buses carrying Shia pilgrims were raided by LJ terrorists in Mastung on multiple occasions. Earlier, in 2006, LJ militants had bombed a Milad gathering in Karachi's Nishtar Park, wiping out much of the Sunni Tehreek leadership. However, where Balochistan is concerned, LJ's activities have come down considerably, and there's a strong possibility of other militant groups, such as the IS-K, being involved.

In fact, many experts believe that many of LJ's cadres have been absorbed by IS-K, which is active across the region. It was only last month that the authorities had claimed they had gunned down an IS-K "commander" in Mastung. This individual had reportedly been involved in several terrorist acts in Balochistan. As for Hangu, while the area has also witnessed sectarian bloodshed in the past, this time the mosque that was attacked was inside a police station. Other parts of KP have also been experiencing militant violence carried out by the TTP — which has distanced itself from the latest attacks — and its offshoots, as well as IS-K. Balochistan's security situation over the past few decades has ignited apprehension, with the presence of both separatist and religiously inspired militancy.

A return to the bloodletting of old, despite the massive security footprint in the province, should be a matter of great concern. The state needs to deploy all the resources at its disposal to neutralise terrorists in Balochistan and, indeed, the rest of the country.

If this monster is not vanquished at this stage, it will create a security nightmare of significant proportions. KP and the former tribal districts also need to be protected from the blood-soaked assaults of the TTP and like-minded terrorist groups. Instead of indulging in extracurricular activities, the security establishment must focus on an effective counterterrorism strategy to uproot militant networks in the country.

Peace is essential for free and fair elections, and militant actors will try to derail a smooth transition from a caretaker set-up to an elected government. Therefore, the caretaker administration must devote all its energies to ensuring peaceful polls, and checking the militant menace.

Stepping up

Muna Khan

In 2014, I had the good fortune of attending a talk by my favourite writer, David Sedaris, where he read from a yet to be published piece about his Fitbit, a digital pedometer which is worn on your wrist and monitors your activity. The goal is to take 10,000 steps every day, which is roughly eight kilometres.

When I began graduate school in 2017 in the US, the Fitbit was quite common and more affordable, so I bought one. Soon, I became obsessed with hitting 10,000 steps, then reaching that goal quicker in the day, and then increasing that goal. I did not let Chicago's schizophrenic weather come between me and my steps. Once the weather improved, I would wake at sunrise and walk to get more steps. I was competing against myself. I saw more of the city in my walks than I did as a student reporter.

I caught the walking bug from my father, a life-long avid walker come rain or shine, and I was determined to continue my practice once back in Karachi.

Sadly, that didn't last long, because I could only walk in parks or the beach near my house and became bored of the same scenery. I was also conscious of my body among a sea of men in these places. I occasionally walk my dogs in the neighbourhood, but DHA is a hot, dirty mess and the walk is not pleasant. The beauty of walking — whether aimless or with purpose — is that you cannot predict your experience.

Inevitably, every woman says the most enjoyable part of being abroad is walking. Women want to walk without fear — of stares, harassment and other worries they carry when they step out of their safety zones in Pakistan. Before people get into a tizzy, please try to understand women's vulnerabilities in public spaces here versus anywhere else. The outdoors, which has always represented freedom, is a melting pot of inappropriate behaviour here. Crime statistics prove it. Between Jan 1 and April 30, a total of 10,365 cases of violence against women were reported to the Punjab police, and 777 to the Sindh police, according to a report by the Sustainable Social Development Organisation. The top two crimes were kidnapping and rape.

I know I am more safe than a woman who travels by public transport but, like her, I am always at risk of something happening to me because of my sex. This is why women bicycle or walk with guards behind them. This is why they drive gated parks to walk or watch their children play, or take a group of men wherever they go — even if it's a few minutes away. The idea of walking to nearby places is anathema to most of us. Our cities hate pedestrians.

But for health reasons, I have to resume my walking practice. I will partner with my father. Maybe we'll take short drives to discover different parts of our neighbourhood.

I am thinking of time spent in Mexico City, which has so many public parks, including the largest one in Latin America which is also one of the oldest in the world: Chapultepec Park. It is spread over 1,695 acres — twice the size of Central Park in New York. I joked with my family how it would have been converted into a housing scheme in Pakistan. Mexico is not immune from greedy property developers eager to gentrify neighbourhoods, but its government is committed to investing in public spaces because it believes such spaces foster a sense of community, culture, and identity. While Mexico has one of the highest crime rates in the world and its own versions of DHA, that divide is not so visible in public spaces in the capital. I went to several places where the government had invested in stationary exercise machines for people to use for free; they also organise all kinds of activities for free. People also use these spaces to practise yoga, dancing, and for various classes. And they love their dogs.

Organisations working on urban issues who promote the 'right to a city' concept — giving the power of the city to its citizens — can apply for grants to invest in public spaces which may be neglected by the government in favour of wealthier areas. The private sector also invests in public spaces when they create their urban projects because it increases land value.

Since visiting Mexico City, I have been wondering whether it is possible to live under a 'corrupt' government that invests in social services and spaces for citizens to thrive? Maybe healthy, happy citizens will organise to root that corruption out, or negotiate for better services for themselves.

We will soon have a new government. I hope it can make accessibility its guiding principle when creating urban policies and think of ways to invest in our happiness. We cannot afford to segregate ourselves in silos. -- Courtesy Dawn

Economic emergency

Aizzahmad Chaudhry

For most Pakistanis, the prevailing economic conditions have unleashed unprecedented hardship. Steep power tariffs and high fuel costs have made everything expensive. Even the basic necessities are now beyond the reach of the public. Spending consistently more than earning has indebted the country to the core. We have mortgaged the future of even our grandchildren.

The irony is that while the rest of the country is expected to bear the economic crunch, for the top tiers of government, it appears to be business as usual. Foreign trips abroad have been in full force, regardless of the expense involved. Let us bear in mind that foreign policies are made at home, and not through meetings and tours abroad.

It is time our government, an interim one though it is, led the austerity drive from the front, particularly when they expect the rest of the country to bear the economic pressures. We can take a cue from the present chief justice, who has voluntarily given up protocol, privileges and all pomp and show attached to his high office. The administration, too, needs to demonstrate to the people through definitive actions that it stands with them in this time of acute economic emergency.

As a general rule, official tours abroad should be suspended. Online mediums are effective in today's era, and our ambassadors abroad can represent us. There should be no free electricity for anyone — without exception. No free petrol or designated cars either; only car pools from which vehicles can be requisitioned.

All loss-making state-owned enterprises should be closed down or privatised in a manner which is transparent and judicious for existing employees. When East Germany merged with West Germany, a massive programme of privatisation of East German SOEs was undertaken. They chose to sell only those that were functional; rehabilitated some that were not beyond repair and then sold them; and closed down the enterprises which were dysfunctional and could not be set right.

In this time of emergency, we cannot sustain loss-making enterprises, because it is not our own money but borrowed money from which we subsidise their existence. The government's primary job is to regulate, not build financially unsustainable enterprises. An even better option is exploring public-private partnerships.

The centre as well as the provincial governments cannot create more jobs than they have already done. More jobs can be created only through industrialisation. Our industry is under pressure not only from the high costs of inputs, but also regulatory bodies whose officials hound industrialists, often in search of bribes.

True, industrialists make profits, but they also create jobs, reducing poverty in the process. Barring those who exploit the system to receive subsidies, when an industrialist expands his business, he does so because he has the know-how and capital. He is not exploiting the nation, but generating employment and economic activity. That is the attitude our bureaucracy and regulators need to develop towards our struggling industry. China has developed because they encouraged industrial and technological growth. The US is also boosting its manufacturing efforts. At our end, the long-awaited Special Economic Zones should be constructed as a top priority. Red tape and corruption are discouraging foreign and even domestic investors from setting up industries in Pakistan. The constitution of the Special Investment Facilitation Council seems to be a step in the right direction. This civil-military initiative seeks to cut red tape and encourage investors to profit from Pakistan's investment potential in IT, agriculture, energy, and mining.

Circular debt is another big hole in the treasury. The agreements negotiated with the IPPs are clearly loaded against the interests of the people. All agreements must be renegotiated, including the recent ones, invoking force majeure. This economic emergency constitutes more than force majeure; it has the risk of making Pakistan insolvent.

Let us be clear. There will be no easy money coming into our country anymore. Not even in the name of climate justice. We must learn to stand on our own feet. Our leadership needs to have faith in our own experts and our own resources. We need to do what is most essential: embrace austerity at all layers of the executive, legislature, and judiciary; privatise dysfunctional SOEs transparently; renegotiate terms with all IPPs; and make policies that encourage domestic investors to put their money in industry rather than in real estate. It is always difficult to untie a complex knot. However, if these key areas of bad governance are addressed, much of the rest will fall in place. -- Courtesy Dawn

China fosters new-generation nuclear power reactors

BEIJING (APP): China's home-grown nuclear power facilities with safer technology have rolled off the production line, with over 20 third-generation nuclear power reactors currently in the pipeline, set to generate more clean energy to power the country's growth.

At present, China boasts over 50 operational nuclear reactor units, and among them is the "Hualong One" generator set, installed in the eastern city of Fuqing. This domestically designed third-generation nuclear reactor has not only increased on-grid electricity generation but has also revitalized both upstream and downstream industry chains.

The newly developed nukes are designed with a safer core-cooling technology, compared with the second-generation nukes. In addition to utilizing externally powered circulating cooling water, China's Hualong One reactors are equipped with a dual security system and a two-layer containment structure. The No 5 unit in Fuqing, the first Hualong One unit to enter commercial operation in January 2021, has three super-large water towers mounted on its top. In the event of an emergency where the circulating water system fails, thousands of tonnes of water stored in these tanks will flow automatically without requiring a power supply. Furthermore, the nuclear island has been encapsulated in two robust concrete shells, measuring

1.3 meters and 1.8 meters in thickness, securely locking the radioactive materials within.

The Hualong One is capable of withstanding the onslaughts of typhoons of all degrees, earthquakes with the highest intensity, and the impact of jetliners.

With over 60,000 components, more than 88 percent of which are domestically developed, China is the fourth country globally, after the United States, France and Russia, to possess the core technology.

Gemstones: a valuable asset for revenue generation

PESHAWAR (APP): Busy like a honeybee in cutting and polishing of raw gemstones in his shop at Namak Mandi, Zahid Ahmad (38), a progressive gemstone exporter of Peshawar is often seen asking his brother Ali Akbar and fellow laborers' to hurry up to meet the placed orders of domestic jewelers and foreign investors.

Enjoying the famous Pashto song "Iarsha Pekhawah ta qamees tor mala rawora," (go to Peshawar and bring black shirt for me) playing on his cell phone while cutting and polishing precious gemstones with archaic machines at Namak Mandi, a hub of gemstones trade in Peshawar City, the motivated exporter Zahid Ahmad said the demands of KP's gemstones have been increased in domestic and international market due to its brilliance clarity and glittering designs.

Inherited the painstaking business from his father 15 years ago, the Peshawar's born gemstone trader said "Pakistan's rare-earth mineral such as Ruby, Emerald, Sapphire, Topaz, Aquamarine, Quartz, Garnet, Lapis Lazuli, Opal, Agate, Moonstone, Feldspar, Kunzite and Zircon mostly found in abundance in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Gilgit Baltistan, Azad Kashmir and southeast of Balochistan attract domestic and foreign investors.

Zahid said the demands of Swat's emerald, Mardan's topaz, Kohistan's peridot, tourmaline of Chitral and Azad Kashmir's ruby were increased in UAE, Gulf, SAARC, CARs, Europe and US. A visitor would be astonished to see plenty of shops of gemstones while passing through Namak Mandi bazaar where a gemstones market was set up in 1970, providing direct and indirect jobs to around three lakh people.

Ali Akbar, who was assisting his elder brother in gemstones business, told APP that precious gemstones were being wasted due to unmechanized mining, lack of technology and laboratories in the province, resulting in huge economic and financial losses to the government kitty. In Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, he said most of the stone cutters and polishers do stone faceting on conventional archaic machines and their precious time was wasted to bring inherent luster besides desired symmetry to gemstones.

The local residents and unprofessional hands mostly mine these jewels in a hazardous traditional way in the mountainous regions mostly bordering with Afghanistan that caused irreparable damage to hidden treasure.

He said that a person with technical know-how can easily earn Rs15,000 per carat from Emerald and Sapphire and upto Rs 100,000/- profit from Ruby after making about Rs 0.6 million investment.

Mamoor Khan, pattern-in-chief, All Pakistan Commercial Exporters Association (APCEA) told the news agency that Pakistan's economy could be improved by giving status of industry to the gemstones sector.

CM Naqvi inaugurate Ibn-e-Sina reading room, cafeteria of KEMU

Caretaker CM praises police for foiling terrorist attack on check-post

Independent Report
LAHORE: Punjab Caretaker Chief Minister Mohsin Naqvi inaugurated Ibn-e-Sina reading room and cafeteria of King Edward Medical College University (KEMU) after up-gradation, on Sunday.

Accompanied by the Punjab cabinet members, he visited the upgraded reading room and the cafeteria. They reviewed the facilities being provided in the reading room and cafeteria and checked the quality of edible items at cafeteria.

CM Naqvi went to the kitchen of the cafeteria and inspected food preparation process. The CM and ministers met doctors present in the reading room and cafeteria and asked them about the facilities being provided there. Talking to doctors after the inaugural ceremony, the CM congratulated students on getting a reading room and a new cafeteria. "Few months earlier, I witnessed during my visit that the condition of the cafeteria was in bad shape, the air-conditioners of the reading room were out of order; dust was all around and it was in a pathetic condition."

He said now the reading room had become of an international standard. He hoped that the Mayo Hospital would be upgraded by January 31 next year. The hospital administration would take over ownership of the up-gradation work and the work would be completed soon, he added. "I visit every floor and review the pace of ongoing work."

Religious scholars, leaders propose solutions for economic prosperity at Seerat-un-Nabi Conference

ISLAMABAD (APP): Caretaker Minister for Religious Affairs and Interfaith Harmony, Aneeq Ahmed said the life of the Holy Prophet Muhammad (Peace Be Upon Him) stood as a timeless wisdom.

Addressing the annual Seerat-un-Nabi Conference themed - Practical Wisdom for Economic Prosperity in the light of Sunnah - here at the Pakistan-China Friendship Centre, he emphasized that the true success was not measured by wealth, fame, or power instead, the strength of one's character, integrity of actions, and impact on the well-being of others.

In today's rapidly changing world, where success is often measured by material achievements, Minister Aneeq encouraged believers to reflect on their own conduct, saying, "To truly embody the values of faith, we must strive to align our ethics and actions with the radiant example of the Prophet's life."

He further praised the Prophet's noble character, stating that the Prophet was known for his impeccable manners and even prayed for his enemies, demonstrating the highest moral standards.

Sighting a decision of Federal Shariat Court to abrogate interest-based system from the financial institutions in a period of five years, he opined that if the state machinery made 20 percent efforts annually, the job would be completed within the stipulated timeframe.

Reciting a verse of the Holy Quran, he alarmed that how a country could flourish in the comity of nations after making anti-Islam policies.

Meanwhile, Caretaker Minister for Interior, Sarfraz Ahmed Bugti, highlighted the significance of Islamic values and the need for anti-corruption measures. He underlined the corruption's detrimental impact on the country's foundations and announced plans to establish trade regulations in line with Islamic traditions.

Minister Bugti reiterated that adhering to the principles laid out by Prophet Muhammad (peace be upon him) would lead to prosperity and development. He also emphasized the crucial role of scholars in the present era and assured that Pakistan, as a nuclear power, would not allow any weakening of its stance. In a call for unity, he affirmed that all Paki-
