"We stand with you today and always," he added. Opener Travis Head hit a sparkling 137 to power Australia to a record-extending sixth World Cup title with a convincing six-wicket win over India in Ahmedabad on Sunday.

Chasing a tricky 241 for victory in the final, Australia slipped to 47-3 before the left-handed Head hit his second century of the tournament to steer the team home with seven overs to spare.

Head's knock and his marathon stand of 192 with Marnus Labuschagne, unbeaten on 58, ended India's dominant run of 10 unbeaten matches at the event.

Head fell after his 120-ball knock laced with 15 fours and four sixes before Glenn Maxwell hit the winning runs to trigger wild celebrations in the Aussie camp.

"Just thrilled to be a part of it," man-of-the-match Head told Star Sports.

"It's a lot better than seeing the World Cup on the couch at home (on his injury). I was a little bit nervous but Marnus played exceptionally well and soaked all the pressure."

India's chances of ending a global trophy drought since their 2013 Champions Trophy win went up in smoke once Head got going with Labuschagne.

Head's century was the seventh in a World Cup final and third by an Australian after Ricky Ponting (140 not out v India in 2003) and Adam Gilchrist (149 v Sri Lanka in 2007).

Rupee's recovery against dollar

The rupee is expected to maintain its upward trend in the coming week, helped by dollar sales by exporters and optimism about the country's economy following its deal with the International Monetary Fund for the next loan tranche what the dealers and analysts believe. The rupee recovered 0.36 percent against the dollar over the week, breaking a 17-day losing streak in the interbank market and rising from 287.55 on Monday to 286.50 on Friday. The local unit has recently appreciated due to the optimism sparked by the IMF review and its positive response, which boosted investors' confidence in the economy, according to dealers. According to a currency dealer, we expect the rupee's rally will continue as the market's inflows have started to improve. Exporters are returning to the market to sell dollars in anticipation that the rupee will appreciate further in the coming days. Improved supplies and a positive outlook support the rupee.

Worthwhile to mention here is that IMF staff and the Pakistani authorities recently reached a staff-level agreement on the first review under Pakistan's standby arrangement (SBA), subject to approval by the IMF's executive board. Upon approval, the country is set to get approximately $700 million, bringing the total disbursements under the SBA to nearly $1.9 billion.

The Tresmark, a financial technology firm, in a weekly client noted that "As soon as the staff-level agreement was announced with the IMF, the top machinery, including the caretaker prime minister, the interim finance minister, and the governor of the State Bank of Pakistan came out with guns blazing and spoke all positives to reinforce the sentiment." It further said that the verbal intervention was accompanied by market tactics to bring down the local currency. Allegedly, import payments were postponed, and new letters of credit issuance were restricted and oversight in market trading was intense.

The reversal in currency's trend has reintroduced exporters to sell forwards, even though forward premiums were down by 30 percent (one and three months ended the week at 190 and 430 paisa). According to Tresmark, the market now estimates that the Rupee will strengthen to around 282/5, whereupon the SBP will restart its dollar buying. Positive news flows like lending from multilaterals and the IMF's executive board approvals will keep Rupee buoyant. As of November 10, Pakistan has $12.5 billion in foreign exchange reserves, up from $8.5 billion in May.

The remittances and exports are improving. The current account deficit for October is expected to shrink to $100 million. It is projected that Pakistan will get approximately $1.2 billion in financing from the World Bank, Asian Development Bank, and Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank before the end of the year. The government also expects more inflows from Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates to support the country's economy. Over the last 20 days, the global oil prices (Brent) have decreased by 17 percent, from $97 to $80 per barrel. Treasury bills and bonds' cut-off yields are trending downward. Due to the base effect and tight monetary policy and base effect, inflation is predicted to decline significantly starting in January; interest rates are positive on a forward-looking basis.

Being seen & heard

Muna Khan

Going to graduate school in the US as a mature student meant I felt a disconnect with younger students, especially around language and identity issues. It took some time for me to understand words like 'woke' and 'gaslighting' but it provided much humour in the classroom.

I was studying journalism having practised it for about 20 years and had more in common with my professors than students who complained they did not feel seen or heard. I took 'seen and heard' to mean as sources in reporting whereas they meant the opposite — 'truly understood'. Who has time to sit and truly understand sources, people, communities when you're racing against the clock, I'd argue. They blamed the media for not accurately representing communities, or even trying to, which is why the news media was losing audiences who feel invisible. I warned them that talks about feelings will not sit well in a newsroom.

Donald Trump won the election a few months into these discussions. His unexpected victory was blamed on Russian hackers, Facebook ads, Hillary Clinton; but a Harvard study blamed it on the press "specifically the overwhelmingly negative tone of news coverage".

The very classmates I ridiculed had the answer to why the media got it wrong: the liberal elite coastal media did not attempt to understand or fairly report on Trump supporters. It was a big teaching moment for me and I said I would always try to understand the other perspective in my work but it's been a struggle especially when those others use abusive language.

David Brooks' new book How to Know a Person offers insight on how to better see, hear and also be heard in an age where digital connectivity has caused isolation. That sense of being understood can only come from genuine human connections, he writes, and he offers practical steps on how to engage with people or reconnect with old friends.

This may sound like self-help territory but unlike other guides, Brooks' book is meticulously researched. He references neuroscience, psychology, history, education, and the arts to present an understanding of human connections. His concern is to understand the 'decline' of morals in America and offers interesting tidbits, like how words in books have reduced in the 20th century. Using a software tool, he learned how 'bravery' was down 66 percent in books, 'humbleness' by 52pc and 'gratitude' by 49pc. Parents aren't teaching their children about character, instead it's about winning.

Some of his self-help suggestions — how to start conversations — while trite, even silly, speak to a larger issue, not just in the US. Our screen time has upended our social skills. It was possible to have friends with opposing views on a host of issues but that seems impossible now. We — myself included — use emojis to communicate feelings. If you cut yourself off from emotions you risk cutting yourself off from intimacy and life itself.

Along with social media, he holds the widening inequality, populism, bigotry and a decline in religion and community participation responsible for an absence of values born of kindness.

Here, I disagree with him slightly based on my time as a student in the US where I saw an emergence of a new moral code and I believe that doesn't sit right with Brooks, a white conservative who supported the Iraq war and is pro-Israel. The US has made a great deal of strides in diverse political representation, gender and LGBTQ rights and is fighting back against racist and anti-climate policies. It represents a rejection of a world order that has seen a rise of centi-millionaires (people with investable assets greater than $100 million) whose number has doubled in the last 20 years according to a wealth advisory firm.

I believe the pushback to Israel's propaganda is also proof that young people are calling out the lies because they now can 'see, hear' Palestinians, who have been denied space in the press. Go to TikTok to see the videos of users reading a 20-year-old letter by Osama bin Laden to the Americans and agreeing with him. There is a genuine interest in wanting to know, to understand 'others' and ourselves in the process. This is the purpose of journalism and I hope the press can find its way back to representing communities fairly.

Of course, societies need more empathy and human connections are vital for us to thrive. It's why I support ease of travel restrictions between India and Pakistan especially for families and artists, sports people, students on exchange program-mes. Let us connect, talk, listen and have a respectful exchange of ideas so we can ease some of the social pain Brooks says we are all in. These small steps — versus grand PR-driven gestures — can help us become a better friend, neighbour, partner, values I hope we can all support.

Issue of refugees

Aizzah Ahmad Chaudhry

Hundreds of thousands of undocumented Afghan refugees are returning to their country. In principle, it makes perfect sense. No country allows illegal foreign nationals to stay on its land. Pakistan, too, has that right. Notably, at this stage, only undocumented refugees are being obliged to return home. The caretaker interior minister said in a Senate hearing that the government would want the return of refugees to proceed without any manhandling, and with immediate redressal of complaints.

However, since this forced return has coincided with the steep rise of terrorism in Pakistan, a correlation has developed in the public consciousness that the expulsion of Afghan refugees is Pakistan's answer to the Taliban government's non-cooperation on the issue of the TTP, which is carrying out terrorist acts against Pakistan. This perception needs to be addressed.

There is a view that Afghan refugees were victims of foreign aggression and oppression. Some would even suggest that Afghan refugees have lived in Pakistan long enough to be deemed economic migrants. As it is, many of those returning now might come back to Pakistan in the near future because there is no real economic pull for them to settle in Afghanistan. Hence the need to talk to Kabul for creating pull factors, such as offering land.

Amidst this diversity of views, the debate has begun to affect the overall trajectory of Pak-Afghan ties. Pakistanis wonder why the Taliban government is not sensitive to Pakistan's high concern about TTP-sponsored terrorism. The answer lies in recognising the fact that the Taliban of Afghanistan and the Taliban of Pakistan are two sides of the same ideological coin. Both derive their inspiration from the founder of the Taliban movement. The TTP helped the Afghan Taliban during the latter's fight with Americans. The Afghan Taliban are returning the favour.

Further, the TTP wants to do what the Afghan Taliban would welcome: establish an Islamic emirate in the tribal belt straddling the Pak-Afghan border. It is clear that the Afghan Taliban are unlikely to take any kinetic action against the TTP on their soil. It is worth recalling how their first government defended the Al Qaeda leader's right to stay in Afghanistan despite intense US pressure.

Given these realities, our government needs to adopt a two-pronged approach. Politically, Islamabad should sustain its efforts to persuade Kabul to not allow the TTP to plan attacks against Pakistan using Afghan soil. Kinetically, this is a fight that Pakistan will have to win on its own, as it did in Swat and Waziristan. The perception of the forced return of refugees being tit-for-tat action could have serious implications and cause an open rift with Kabul.

Let us also address a related question that is being asked, ie, why the Afghans are not grateful to Pakistan for all that was done for them in the past four decades. Indeed, Pakistan had helped Afghans push out the Soviet forces and also gave them humanitarian access during the US-led 'war on terror'. Despite US pressure, Pakistan never took kinetic action against the Afghan Taliban leadership that often visited Pakistan to meet their families and receive medical treatment. Consequently, Washington accused us of playing 'good Taliban (Afghan), bad Taliban (Pakistani)', meaning a double game.

In hindsight, when the US started a dialogue with the Taliban and managed to obtain some written commitments from them in return for withdrawing its troops in 2021, should Pakistan not have opened its own dialogue with the Taliban on how they should deal with the issues of TTP, border management, and the return of refugees, if and when they returned to power? They were under immense pressure and would have been more amenable to talks then rather than now when they are in power and unchallenged by any internal faction.

Yet, we must stay engaged with them on the diplomatic and political tracks for candid discussions on the bilateral issues mentioned. If we are to learn from history, all such matters should be discussed in Pakistan's parliament. A diversity of views enriches debate and helps generate sound and consensual policy decisions.

The Afghans tend to view their country as the 'economic roundabout' that could connect West and Central Asia with South Asia. They cite a verse of Allama Iqbal, which characterised Afghanistan as the 'heart of Asia'. This provides an enormous win-win foundation for both countries to work together on regional energy projects and transit trade. This will help make mutually beneficial economic projects the centrepiece of Islamabad's relations with Kabul, in tandem with Pakistan's pivot to geo-economics espoused in our first National Security Policy 2022. — Courtesy Dawn

Stemming out domestic violence still a far cry

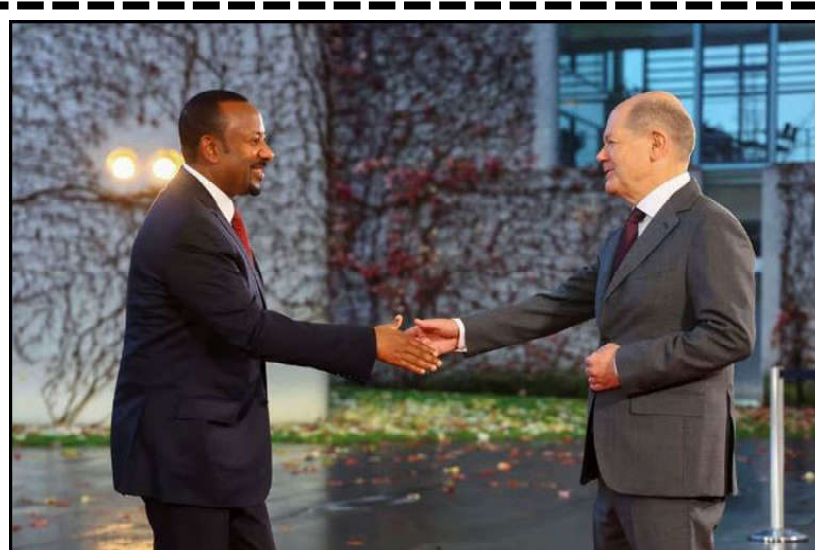

LAHORE (APP): Despite essential legislation and repeated efforts to control this menace, domestic violence still persists in societies worldwide — thanks to ignorance of people to religious and legal obligations and their deep entrenchment in primitive socio-cultural norms. It persisted as an insidious issue in our society for decades that transcends geographical, economic, racial, and cultural boundaries, inflicting its impact on women through verbal abuse, physical assault, beatings, and tragically sometimes even murder. The repercussions extend far beyond mere physical injuries, reaching into the realms of compromised health, weakened psychological well-being and profound emotional distress. Unfortunately, our country is also not immune to this pervasive problem. The roots of domestic violence are deeply embedded and multifaceted with factors like women's low education, poverty, lack of awareness, misinterpretations of Islamic teachings and adherence to customary and prevalent cultural customs contributing to this menace. Significantly, this issue disproportionately affects families in the lower socio-economic strata as men with higher education usually exhibiting a lower propensity to abuse their family women. "Besides other factors, domestic violence against women is a case of failure of respective institutions in effective implementation of relevant laws," remarked Sabahat Rizvi, Secretary Lahore High Court Bar Association. "Being a law practitioner, I can validly attribute the increasing cases of domestic violence to a general tendency of overall lethargy by such institutions and a spirit of male dominance in society," she added. At the same time Sabahat argued that women's welfare is not a government responsibility alone as she also pointed out a growing societal conservatism contributing to the rise in such incidents. "Men, in their personal capacity, perceiving themselves as more powerful, engage in acts of violence against women," she explained. "Therefore, the remedy lies in proper awareness of women and rigorously enforcing relevant legislation to curtail men." The Punjab government has taken several measures to counter this negativity on part of men folk and its detrimental consequences by establishing Punjab Women's Helpline 1043 and Women Safety Mobile Application.

Heavy fighting in north Gaza after hostage deal report denied

Monitoring Desk
GAZA: Fighting raged on Sunday between Hamas militants and Israeli forces in parts of north Gaza and Israeli air strikes killed dozens of Palestinians in the enclave's centre, witnesses said, as a report of a tentative hostage release deal was denied. The Washington Post reported that Israel and Hamas had reached a tentative US-brokered agreement to free dozens of women and children held hostage in Gaza in exchange for a five-day pause in their war, citing people familiar with the matter. It said the hostage release could begin within the next several days, barring last-minute hitches. All parties would freeze combat operations for at least five days while 50 or more hostages are released in groups every 24 hours, the Post reported. Hamas took about 240 hostages during its deadly cross-border rampage into Israeli communities on Oct. 7. The pause is also intended to allow a significant amount of humanitarian aid in, the newspaper reported, adding that the outline of the deal was put together during weeks of talks in Qatar. But both Israel's prime minister and US officials said no agreement had been hammered out yet, with a White House spokesperson saying efforts were continuing to clinch a deal. The Post's report came as Israel appeared to be preparing to expand its offensive against Hamas militants to densely populated Gaza's southern half after air strikes killed dozens of Palestinians, including civilians reportedly sheltering at two schools. Israeli forces invaded late last month after a devastating aerial blitz in response to Hamas's attack, and say they have wrested control of large areas of the north and northwest around Gaza City.

Japanese troops drill on island seen as vulnerable to China

Monitoring Desk
JAPAN: Japanese marines in amphibious assault vehicles stormed an island beach at the edge of the East China Sea on Sunday in a simulated attack to dislodge invaders from territory that Tokyo worries is vulnerable to attack from China. As tensions run high with neighbours China, Russia and North Korea, the drill on the southwest island of Tokunoshima capped an 11-day series of exercises nationwide dubbed 05JX, meant to show the readiness of ground, sea and air forces to defend Japan's territory and infrastructure, including nuclear power plants. "The goal of JX is to show that if there is an emergency situation resulting from an attack, that we are able to respond in a joint way," General Yoshihide Yoshida, chief of staff of the Self-Defence Forces' Joint Staff, said after observing the drill on Tokunoshima. Ground Self-Defence Force amphibious assault vehicles launched from two Maritime Self-Defence Force landing ships anchored offshore. Other troops arrived in semi-inflatable rubber boats, with heavy equipment carried to shore on military hovercraft. Unlike many of the beaches along Japan's southwest island chain stretching toward Taiwan, the one on Tokunoshima does not have a coral reef that would make military operations more difficult. The scope and pace of military exercises in Japan are likely to increase over the next few years, including with US forces, after Prime Minister Fumio Kishida in December.

APEC divided on wars in Gaza, Ukraine

Monitoring Desk
SAN FRANCISCO: Pacific Rim leaders showed divisions over the wars in Ukraine and Gaza after a two-day summit of the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) forum on Friday. Days of meetings involving ministers and leaders were dominated by a summit on Wednesday between US President Joe Biden and Chinese President Xi Jinping aimed at cooling tensions between the world's two largest economies, which have alarmed the region. The 21 APEC members, which include Russia and Muslim-majority Indonesia and Malaysia, went into the meetings divided over Russia's war in Ukraine and the Israeli war on Gaza, and that is how they left. A statement issued by the US echoed last year's APEC leaders' declaration in saying that "most" APEC members "strongly condemn aggression against Ukraine." It said the leaders exchanged views on the Gaza crisis, with some objecting to language of the chair's statement in an accompanying "Golden Gate Declaration" covering economic issues "on the basis that they do not believe that APEC is a forum to discuss geopolitical issues." Some APEC leaders shared the united messages of the Nov. 11 joint Arab-Islamic summit in Riyadh, the chair's statement said. Brunei, Indonesia and Malaysia in a joint statement said they were among those who supported the messages of the Riyadh summit.

Argentina readies to vote in likely presidential election thriller

Monitoring Desk
BUENOS AIRES: Argentines head to the polls on Sunday in a delicately poised presidential runoff, with voters seeking a solution to triple-digit inflation and rising poverty and two clashing visions for the country's future on offer. The election sees Peronist Economy Minister Sergio Massa go head-to-head with outsider libertarian Javier Milei. Massa offers continuity but has been at the helm during the worst economic crisis in two decades. Milei pledges economic shock therapy, from shutting the central bank to ditching the peso. With many voters unconvinced by either, some have characterized the vote as a choice of the "lesser evil": fear of Milei's painful economic medicine or anger at Massa over the economic crisis. Many Argentines say they won't vote at all. Whoever wins, it will shake up Argentina's political landscape, its economic roadmap, trade in grains, lithium and hydrocarbons, and its global ties with partners including China, the United States and Brazil. "The election will mark a profound rupture in the system of political representation in Argentina," said Julio Burdman, director of the consultancy Observatorio Electoral. "I think all the political forces as we have known them are going to be transformed." The story of the election race has been the shock rise of 53-year-old economist and former TV pundit Milei, driven by the disenchantment of Argentines with the traditional political parties on both the left and right. Milei has a slight edge in opinion polls, but most show a tight and uncertain race. Massa, 51, an experienced political chameleon, has been clawing back votes with tax cuts and campaigns highlighting Milei's radical plans to slash state spending.

Iran's Khamenei urges Muslim states to cut political ties with Israel for 'limited period'

Monitoring Desk
DUBAI: Iran's Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei appealed to Muslim states with political ties with Israel to at least cut them for "a limited time". State media reported on Sunday, weeks after he called for an Islamic oil and food embargo on Israel. "Some Islamic governments have condemned Israeli crimes in assemblies while some have not. This is unacceptable," Khamenei said before reiterating that the main task of Islamic governments should be to cut off Israel from energy and goods. "Islamic governments should at least cut off political ties to Israel for a limited time," Khamenei added. During a joint summit between members of the Organisation for Islamic Cooperation and the Arab League in Saudi Arabia's capital on Nov. 11, Muslim states did not agree to impose wide-ranging sanctions on Israel.

Musk's X dumped by blue chip firms after White House rebuke

Monitoring Desk
SAN FRANCISCO: Elon Musk, the billionaire owner of Tesla, SpaceX and social platform X, came under fire from all sides this week after endorsing an anti-Semitic conspiracy theory and then — in an ostensible attempt at damage control — terming phrases associated with the Palestinian cause "euphemisms that imply genocide". On Wednesday, the world's richest man sparked outrage by endorsing an antisemitic post on X that falsely claimed that members of the Jewish community were stoking hatred against white people. The original post was perceived as a reference to a longtime conspiracy theory among White supremacists that Jews have a secret plan to bring in illegal immigrants to weaken white majorities. Most notoriously, the idea was promoted by the man who carried out a mass shooting at a synagogue in Pittsburgh in 2018.

Azerbaijan, Armenia agree on principles of peace treaty

Monitoring Desk
YEREVAN: Armenia and Azerbaijan have been able to agree on the basic principles for a peace treaty but are still "speaking different diplomatic languages", Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan said on Saturday, according to Russia's TASS news agency. The two countries have been at odds for decades, most notably over the breakaway Azerbaijani region of Nagorno-Karabakh, which Baku's forces recaptured in September, prompting a mass exodus of ethnic Armenians from it. But Pashinyan said there had been some progress in talks over a peace treaty even though he was cited as saying that the two countries still often struggled to agree on some things. "We have good and bad news about the Armenia-Azerbaijan peace process," TASS quoted Pashinyan as saying in Yerevan.

US sees 'significant pause' if prisoners are released

Monitoring Desk
MANAMA: US President Joe Biden's main adviser on the Middle East said on Saturday there would be a "significant pause" in fighting if Hamas agrees to release prisoners. "The surge in humanitarian relief, the surge in fuel, the pause... will come when hostages are released," Brett McGurk told a security conference in Bahrain. Release of a large number of prisoners would result in "a significant pause... and a massive surge of humanitarian relief," he said.

CPEC has transformational impact on socio-economic landscape in Pakistan: Ahsan

BEIJING (APP): The China-Pakistan Economic Corridor (CPEC), a flagship project of China's Belt and Road Initiative (BRI), has emerged as a transformative force reshaping the socio-economic transformational impact on the lives of people in Pakistan, former Minister for Planning and Special Initiative Ahsan Iqbal said.

"When we started CPEC in 2013, Pakistan was suffering from a major energy crisis. We were experiencing power shortages for 16 to 18 hours per day, and we had major infrastructural bottlenecks with very poor physical infrastructure," he said in an exclusive interview with China Global Television Network (CGTN).

And because of a lack of electricity, energy was not there, and industrial and agricultural production was suffering, which meant there was more unemployment, which was a major contributor to more poverty, he added.

Ahsan Iqbal said that through the CPEC, in three years, more than $25 billion of investment came into Pakistan that modernized infrastructure and created new roads to connect many regions. It provided more than 8,000 megawatts of new power, which helped the country overcome power shortages.

"As we had energy in the economy, our agricultural and industrial outputs improved, which brought more employment for thousands of young people and also helped them come out of poverty," he added.

About special economic zones, he said that nine special economic zones have been identified in different regions of Pakistan and added, "All regions are taking part and taking benefit from CPEC, which is another indicator that it is a very inclusive project and it does not leave anyone behind." "We are now working with China to set up industries in these special economic zones, through which both Pakistan and China can work together and export goods to third countries," he added.

"Gwadar Economic Zone is developing very fast, but in addition to that, nine more economic zones are being developed in Pakistan, in which we hope that investment that will come from China will help us in industrialization and that will be a major contributor towards structural transformation of the economy." He opined that it would create more jobs, and most importantly, Pakistan needs to improve its export performance, adding, "We hope that with Chinese technology and investment and their access to global supply chains, we will be able to improve our exports as well." Terming CPEC a game changer for Pakistan and the region, he said that the future of economic development lies in regional cooperation.

"We can create an economic market for a huge benefit for three billion people living in South Asia, China, Central Asia, and the Middle East through regional connectivity," he added. He said that therefore, programs like CPEC and BRI could help people eliminate poverty and unemployment and realize the dream of shared prosperity as well as people-to-people contact.

Nawaz to be next PM, claims Marriyum

LAHORE (APP): Pakistan Muslim League-Nawaz (PML-N) leader Marriyum Aurangzeb said on Sunday that her party's Quaid Mian Nawaz Sharif would be the next prime minister after February 8 elections.

Addressing a press conference here at the party secretariat, she said only free and fair election was solution to the challenges being faced by the country. The former information minister said her party's political opponents knew it well that Nawaz Sharif would become the prime minister for the fourth time, adding that the PML-N's manifesto would be provision of relief to people. About her PML-N President Shehbaz Sharif's acquittal in the Ashiana Housing Scheme reference by a Lahore accountability court, she said the former prime minister was vindicated once again. Marriyum said Shehbaz showed loyalty with his brother and faced various fake corruption cases.

Marriyum Aurangzeb said that Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) Chairman Imran Khan was imposed on the country through deliberate failure of the result transmission system (RTS) in the 2018 elections. "Today's youth must know what kind of game was played and the people had to bear the brunt of it," said the PML-N leader. She added that a game was played with the opposition and the system of the country. To a question about the recent statement of the Pakistan People's Party (PPP) Co-chairperson Asif Ali Zardari on elections, the PML-N leader said his statement about transparent elections was encouraging.

Social media campaign by a political party to defame Pakistan exposed ISLAMABAD (INP): Another social media campaign to defame Pakistan launched by a political party has been exposed as certain elements are involved in accusing Pakistan of providing arms to Israel.

This social media campaign was launched while keeping their interests in mind at the cost of the country as the political party's supporters levelled this allegation in connection with the ongoing atrocities committed by Israel targeting the Palestinians in Gaza Strip and West Bank.

And this baseless accusation was promoted by the Indian media by presenting it as a news—a practice followed by India whenever an opportunity is provided by such elements. The fabricated story was created and spread on social media by claiming that an aircraft transported weapons from Pakistan to Israel. However, there is no truth in it. In fact, even the plane and the said flight had nothing to do with Pakistan.

Actually, the flight was a part of the British efforts to shift the Afghan refugees, again showing how propaganda works in the post-truth world with social media being the main tool for promoting lies and deception. Earlier, an old video of a dummy fighter jet set ablaze by supporters of the PTI chairman in May 2023 in Mianwali.
