A level pitch

The conduct of credible elections is essential for the health of any democratic system. However, throughout our electoral history, holding timely — and free and fair polls — has always been an uphill struggle. Up until a few weeks ago, there were considerable doubts about whether elections would actually be held in February. Thanks to the Supreme Court's timely interventions those worries have subsided.

Yet an equally important question has arisen about the fairness and transparency of the electoral process. Post May 9, the PTI has claimed it is being erased as a political entity by the state, and there is sufficient evidence to support these claims.

Amongst the biggest blows the former ruling party suffered was the rejection by the ECP of the PTI's intra-party polls, and the denial of the bat election symbol. This situation has been rectified for the time being as the Peshawar High Court suspended the ECP's decision on Tuesday, effectively putting the bat back into the PTI's hands. The order will remain in the field till Jan 9.

Legal observers say the ECP can either file an intra-court appeal, or petition the apex court to vacate the PHC verdict.

The judicial authorities should consider expediting the hearing of this case to dispel any remaining uncertainty regarding the PTI's use of its election symbol. Of course, as this paper has consistently stated, the PTI and all other contenders need to be provided a level playing field in order to freely contest the general elections. Yet the PHC's decision aside, the party still appears to be getting the rough end of the stick. For example, PTI vice chairman Shah Mahmood Qureshi was manhandled and rearrested outside Adiala jail in an undisclosed case on Wednesday, despite securing bail in the cipher case. Meanwhile, the PTI has also moved a contempt petition in the SC citing alleged violation of the court's Dec 22 order by the ECP, and seeking an end to the arrests and harassment of its workers and candidates.

In violation of the Constitution, various pillars of state, through their acts of omission and commission, have abetted the delay in holding polls. Further infringement of fundamental rights by manipulating the results of the elections even before the first vote is cast should not be allowed.

In decades past, the National Awami Party, PPP and the PML-N have all had obstacles placed in their way, and now it is the PTI's turn to face the displeasure of the powers that be.

This subterfuge of the democratic process must cease, and all parties should be allowed to freely campaign for the polls. Moreover, the run-up to elections, as well as polling day, needs to be free of violence and intimidation.

F.S. Aijazuddin

Until the 1960s, no member of the British Royal Family could be portrayed on the stage or on screen. The character had to have been dead for at least 50 years.

Queen Victoria became fair game after 1951 (the 50th anniversary of her death). Even as late as 1957, when The Prince and the Showgirl was made, Marilyn Monroe could be shown shaking only the gloved hand of Queen Mary.

The television series The Crown has put paid to all that. It is the saga of a parallel royalty. The last episode brings the story up to the death of Queen Elizabeth II in September 2022 — history in real time.

The screen reimagining of our subcontinental idols has been cautious. Hollywood began with films like Nine Hours to Rama (1963) about Mahatma Gandhi's assassination and then David Attenborough's Gandhi (1982), which depicted his fuller life. The latter film won eight Oscars, including one for best costume design (how does one design a homespun loincloth?).

Bollywood was slower off the mark. Some like Gulzar's Aandhi (1975) and Amrit Nahata's Kissa Kursi Ka (1975) were released during Mrs Gandhi's prime ministership. Too close to the knuckle, they ran foul of the censors.

Inevitably, someone felt the Quaid-i-Azam M.A. Jinnah deserved also to be elevated to the screen. The film Jinnah (1998) was conceived by two Pakistani expats — Akbar S. Ahmed and Jamil

Reimagined idols

Dehlvi. The actor chosen to play Jinnah — Christopher Lee — had made his name in horror films. Nevertheless, Lee relished the role, describing it as “the most important” he had ever played.

He gave a surprisingly credible performance of the man whose life and achievements the biographer Stanley Wolpert summarised in this pithy paragraph: “Few individuals significantly alter the course of history. Fewer still modify the map of the world. Hardly anyone can be credited with creating a nation-state. Muhammad Ali Jinnah did all three.”

Every new nation attributes its existence to one person, a father of the nation, responsible for its paternity. Prominent amongst them, for example, were Soekarno in Indonnesia, Kenyatta in Kenya, Ben Bella in Algeria, and Nkrumah in Ghana. To Bangladeshi, it is Banglābandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman. Sheikh Mujib's life can be split into two halves — from his birth in 1920 to Pak-is-tan's independence in 1947, and the second from 1947 until his assassination in 1975.

Shyam Benegal's recently released biopic Mujib: The Making of a Nation (2023) covers both, with commendable sensitivity. Such a film, sponsored by the Bangladesh government of Prime Minister Hasina Wajed (Mujib's daughter) and the Indian government could have been clouded by bias.

(Attenborough's Gandhi reeked of Mrs Indira Gandhi's benediction.) In fact, Shyam's film is surprisingly free of sponsored prejudice. The film is playing to packed houses in Bangladesh. It could be shown safely in Pakistan, without risking a riot.

The film opens with Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's return to Dhaka on Jan 10, 1972, after president Zulfikar Ali Bhutto ordered his release from jail in West Pakistan. The story then reverts to his early years, his tutelage under the Bengali leader Hossain Shaheed Suhrawardy (prime minister briefly from September 1957 to October 1958 of a united Pakistan), and his demands for equitable treatment for a neglected East Pakistan.

Confrontation with Gen Ayub Khan's military government led to stints in jail. In 1966, Sheikh Mujibur Rahman announced his neo-secessionist six-point plan.

The general election held in 1970 gave Mujib's Awami League a majority in the National Assembly. That proved indigestible to president Yahya Khan and to Mr Bhutto who preferred to reign in a divided hell than to serve in a united heaven.

There are fleeting appearances in the film by Yahya and Bhutto, unavoidable images of the 1971 war, and a frank admission of Indira Gandhi's midwifery. However, there is no reference to Mujib's dramatic appearance (at Bhutto's conciliatory invitation) at the 1974 Islamic Summit in Lahore.

On Aug 15, 1975, some Bangladeshi military officers did what their West Pakistani counterparts had threatened to do for years: they killed Mujibur Rahman. Benegal's film ends with images of the blood-soaked bodies of Mujib and all his family members, except his eldest daughter Hasina Wajed who happened to be abroad.

Benegal's film on Mujib is less about Mujib's political persona than about him as a demonstrative husband and a caring father. It is a tribute by Hasina to the father she shares with their nation. — Courtesy Dawn

Artificial intelligence has the potential to revolutionise our response to the concerns of climate change and climatic disasters. The convergence of AI and climate action holds promise not only for enhancing our ability to adapt to a changing environment but also for developing sustainable solutions that may help mitigate the factors behind climate change.

Climate change is driven by anthropogenic activities, causing greenhouse gas emissions and global warming, and posing severe risks such as rising sea levels, ecosystem disruption, the endangering of species, and altered ocean currents. Frequent climatic events such as hurricanes, droughts, floods and wildfires cause biodiversity loss and pose health risks. From precision agriculture and renewable energy optimisation to disaster prediction and response, AI is driving innovation that can reshape our approach to climate-related issues.

In 2023, a surge in climate change-induced disasters occurred worldwide. Hurricane Idalia, originating in the Caribbean in 2023, attained Category 3 status and left widespread destruction in Perry, Florida in its wake.

Closer to home, in June this year, Cyclone Biparjoy threatened Pakistan's coastline and severely impacted Gujarat in India, necessitating evacuations and causing casualties. Severe floods struck Greece, Türkiye, and Bulgaria in September 2023 with heavy rains causing flooding and landslides. Rwanda also experienced floods and landslides in May 2023.

According to the US National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, over the past two decades, rising temperatures, prolonged droughts and arid conditions have elevated wildfire risks. Climate change amplifies interconnected factors such as temperature and humidity in vegetated areas, triggering dangerous wildfires. In July 2023, Greece faced devastating wildfires, the US battled wildfires in California, and Canada struggled with over 900 active fires, 599 of them “out of control”. Also, in Southeast Asia, Myanmar, Thailand, Laos and Vietnam experienced wildfires.

Chile's Megadrought culminated in a catastrophic wildfire earlier this year. AI plays a crucial role in providing weather forecasts for anticipating natural disasters accurately. Conventional forecasting relies on intricate mathematical models, which may not be able to predict extreme events. AI's foremost contribution lies in providing early warning mechanisms and post-disaster recovery efforts. Through the analysis of extensive data from sources like satellite imagery, weather stations, and social media, AI algorithms can discern patterns and trends indicative of impending disasters. For instance, AI-driven systems can detect hurricane formation and factors that could lead to wildfire, such as smoke plumes, rapidly changing heat signatures and the appearance of hotspots in vegetated areas in satellite images, enabling timely warnings and evacuations. The US utilises AI to enhance weather predictions, early warnings, flood monitoring, disaster-response coordination, infrastructure assessment and long-term climate modelling, which improves resilience and disaster management. Japan has introduced an emergency announcement system, utilising automated drones to facilitate disaster evacuations. These drones operate on a dedicated private wireless network that remains functional during emergencies. They are equipped with infrared cameras to capture real-time images of disaster-affected areas and transmit them to disaster-response centres to urge people to evacuate. This technology enhances the speed and security of remote damage assessment, thereby improving disaster response efficiency.

Pakistan needs to integrate AI into the operations of its meteorological departments due to the severe impact of climate change. The country faces challenges such as reduced agricultural productivity, irregular water supplies, coastal erosion and increased extreme weather events, making AI-based climate disaster management crucial.

Pakistan ranks among the top 10 countries which are most affected by climate change. Severe floods in 2022, with rainfall three times higher than the national average, had caused damage to the tune of $30 billion, with more than 1,200 fatalities. There are no AI-based measures mentioned in the National Artificial Intelligence Policy to address climate disaster mitigation. Countries, such as the US, which have invested in AI for disaster response, have witnessed notable improvements in preparedness and rapid response time, underlining the potential benefits of a dedicated climate-disaster-mitigation AI policy. Pakistan should therefore consider incorporating climate-disaster-mitigation AI technology measures into the NAIP to effectively cope with the impacts of climate change. — Courtesy Dawn relationships with the Central Asian region were important and Pakistan was the first country to recognize CARs' states and expanded its cooperation expanded in multiple domains.

Pakistan, he said, was part of many important regional forums, including Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO) and Organisation of the Islamic Cooperation (OIC). “It also has multifaceted relationships in the areas of trade, investment, security and defence, connectivity and other.”

He underlined the need for deepening of hard and soft connectivity with CARs and Azerbaijan as Pakistan provided the shortest route to the landlocked Central Asian countries which was a shared agenda giving a win-win situation for both sides.

Senior Fellow (Central Asia and Eurasia), East West Institute, Brussels, Dr. Najam Abbas, in his keynote address, said the country needed to line up its policy discourse to set priority areas for enhanced bilateral cooperation with the Central Asia region as the world after the pandemic and Ukraine-Russia Crisis was looking for alternate supply chains and trade routes to avert any blockade.

As per the global freight projections by 2050, he said, the potential of increased cooperation in the Asia region in terms of freight demanded fulfillment of certain conditions as the world was looking for alternates in the connectivity areas that were halted.

West to blame for world turmoil, says Russia's Lavrov

Monitoring Desk
MOSCOW: The intrigues of Western countries whose dominance is ebbing away are largely responsible for pitching the world into turmoil, Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said in an interview published on Thursday.

Lavrov, in a year-end interview released by the official Tass news agency, warned that no one worldwide could be certain of escaping unscathed from Western machinations in 2024.

"Storms continue in the world and one of the reasons is that the ruling circles in the West provoke crises thousands of kilometres from their borders in order to resolve their own issues at the expense of other peoples," Tass quoted Lavrov as saying in extracts released ahead of the full publication.

"It can be said that given conditions in which the West is clinging to the domination slipping away from it, no one can be protected against its geopolitical intrigues. There is a growing understanding of this."

Moscow has come to blame the West for much of the turmoil and conflict in widely separated regions.

Russia describes its war in Ukraine as an existential struggle against the "collective West" resolved to expand the reach of NATO and inflict a "strategic defeat" on Moscow.

N. Korea's Kim calls for 'accelerated' war preparations

Monitoring Desk
SEOUL: North Korean leader Kim Jong Un urged his party to "accelerate" war preparations including its nuclear programme, state media said Thursday.

The comments came just a week after Kim warned Pyongyang would not hesitate to launch a nuclear attack if "provoked" with nukes. Kim made the comments at the North's ongoing year-end party meeting, where he is expected to unveil key policy decisions for 2024.

Kim asked the party to "further accelerate the war preparations" across sectors, including nuclear weapons and civil defense, Pyongyang's official Korean Central News Agency reported.

He also stressed that the "military situation" on the Korean peninsula had become "extreme" due to "unprecedented" anti-North confrontations with Washington. Seoul, Tokyo and Washington have ramped up defence cooperation in the face of a record-breaking series of weapons tests by Pyongyang this year and recently activated a system to share real-time data on North Korean missile launches.

It also says the outbreak of conflict in the Middle East is a result of the longstanding failures of U.S. foreign policy and called for the establishment of a Palestinian state.

In his comments to Tass, Lavrov called for de-escalation of the Middle East conflict, denouncing as "unacceptable" both acts of terror and "collective punishment".

"It is vital to break the vicious cycle of violence and do away with the injustice from which several generations of Palestinians have suffered," he was quoted as saying. "Only by doing this can stability be achieved in the zone of confrontation in the Middle East as a whole."

Erdogan resembles Netanyahu with Hitler

Monitoring Desk
ANKARA: Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan said on Wednesday that Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu was no different from Adolf Hitler and likened Israel's attacks on Gaza to the treatment of Jewish people by the Nazis.

NATO member Turkey, which supports a two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, has criticised Israel's air and ground assault on Gaza, called it a "terror state" and said its leaders must be tried in international courts.

Sharpening his rhetoric, Erdogan said Turkey would welcome academics and scientists facing persecution for their views on the conflict in Gaza, adding Western countries supporting Israel were complicit in what he called war crimes.

"They used to speak ill of Hitler. What difference do you have from Hitler? They are going to make us miss Hitler. Is what this Netanyahu is doing any less than what Hitler did? It is not," Erdogan said.

"He is richer than Hitler, he gets the support from the West."

Xi vows to prevent anyone 'splitting Taiwan from China in any way'

Monitoring Desk
BEIJING: President Xi Jinping vowed to resolutely prevent anyone from "splitting Taiwan from China in any way", the official Xinhua news agency reported, a little more than two weeks before Taiwan elects a new leader.

China must deepen integration between the two sides, promote the peaceful development of relations across the Taiwan Strait, and "resolutely prevent anyone from splitting Taiwan from China in any way", he said.

Tobacco smoke contains chemicals that cause cancer: Cardiologist

HYDERABAD (APP): Smoking damages nearly every organ in the body and is bad for a person's overall health. People can significantly reduce their chance of smoking-related disease by giving it up.

Talking to APP here on Thursday, Eminent cardiologist Dr. Kashif informed, that tobacco smoke contains more than fifty chemicals that cause cancer.

He said that tobacco also contains nicotine, which is a highly addictive psychoactive drug. When tobacco is smoked, nicotine causes physical and psychological dependency, he added.

He said that every third Pakistani after the age of 40 was suffering from high blood pressure, whereas only three per cent of them get regular medical checkups.

He said that smoking is not only injurious for the users, but passive smoking is also a great threat to those who associate with the smokers as inhaling cigarette smoke could cause more complications.

Dr. Kashif said that smoking is the biggest avoidable cause of death and disability known to mankind and any support for the growth, distribution or sale of tobacco is indefensible on public health grounds, added.

Smoking can also cause a threat of ten per cent more oral cancer such as tongue, mouth and buckle cavities and 15 per cent of other diseases including cardiac, tuberculosis, asthma, and shrinking of mouth tissues and respiratory system, Cardiologist said.
