Half victories

The entire point of an independent judiciary arises from the need for neutral arbiters who can determine, through objective assessment of facts and a dispassionate interpretation and application of the law, whether any member(s) of society has broken the social contract.

It is our great misfortune that our justice system repeatedly fails on this count. Nowhere are the implications of this failure more evident than on the political stage, where careers are made and ended on court cases that seem to be decided not on facts and laws but on the whims of the powers that be. The latest such example is the exoneration of PML-N supreme leader Nawaz Sharif in the Avenfield case. The charges brought against him had seemed enough five years ago for the judiciary to convict him and end his political career but have now disappeared at the stroke of a pen. Were the judges wrong then, or are they wrong now? It is a pity that it depends on whom one asks. In a just society, innocence — especially in cases involving allegations of moral turpitude — cannot be a matter of perspective alone. Mr Sharif's position has not been helped by the fact that the case against him has been dismissed because NAB, which had once relentlessly hounded him and his family, suddenly has no interest in prosecuting him.

People will ask what prompted this change of heart and wonder if it had something to do with Mr Sharif's perceived status as the 'new selected'; few will bother to consider the weaknesses of the original case.

Therefore, while the PML-N supremo may have technically been deemed innocent, the shadow of his conviction will continue to linger and may even turn against him in case he steps out of line again.

It would have been far wiser for Mr Sharif to have returned to the country much earlier to fight his legal battles and secure a more compelling victory in them.

It would have established some distance between his acquittals and the accusation being made by other parties that the state is going all out to skew the playing field in favour of the PML-N. But perhaps Mr Sharif knew better than to have faith in a system that had failed him thrice.

If one considers where his primary rival, PTI's Imran Khan, is today, Mr Sharif cannot be considered irrational for lacking faith in the judicial process. The treatment being meted out to Mr Khan parallels what Mr Sharif was forced to endure some five years ago. In the former's case, too, it seems to matter little what the facts and the laws say. And this, again, is the tragedy of the Pakistani judicial system: that justice is rarely ever seen to be done.

Do our children read books? In the absence of reliable statistics, one must turn to anecdotal evidence, which suggests that the book reading culture does not exist in Pakistan — be it among adults or children. I have yet to meet a publisher who is satisfied with his sales. School textbooks are the publishing industry's bread and butter. Hence publishers do not focus much on storybooks for younger readers.

It's no wonder then that Pakistan has traditionally lacked a thriving children's books industry. Popular authors such as Sufi Tabassum and poets like Allama Iqbal notwithstanding, the industry never picked up. Educators noticed this vacuum and individuals stepped in. The Bookgroup, Nigar Nazaf of Gogi fame and the Alif Laila Book Bus Society emerged in the 1980s and 1990s, with exciting, innovative books that attracted children. But they were not enough to turn around the non-reading culture.

To break this resistance to book-reading, a massive multidimensional effort is clearly needed. First, attractive and colourful books based on our own cultures have to be published for children. Second, these publications must be made accessible to all students through a network of school libraries. Third, the concept of the 'book mentor' must be developed.

Librarians can play a role only if they understand clearly what is expected of them. They are not just 'book keepers', who arrange their ware on shelves and issue them to students, ensuring that the books are returned on time. More important, they should stimulate children's interest in the books they issue and be capable of discussing it meaningfully with them. That presupposes that librarians too have read the books in their care.

To read or not

A beginning has been made in this direction and the much-needed massive push has come from the Idara-i-Taleem-o-Agahi (ITA), organisers of the Pakistan Learning Festival (previously the Children's Literature Festival). It has set the ball rolling, with countless storytelling sessions apart from other enjoyable learning activities. True, the child also learns informally from her experience and exposure. But will she start reading books by attending festivals on and off when they are held? Unlikely.

Still, ITA director Baela Jamil, an incurable optimist, is hopeful, as she is also a doer. Baela is working on a number of fronts. To make children's books easily available, she has gone into publishing and setting up libraries. ITA's activities have been diversified. It has set up a number of low-cost libraries, such as the rickshaw library in Karachi and the Digi Kutub-khana in Mubarak Village, which was initially housed in a trunk. They serve as inexpensive models for others.

Recently, 48 stand-alone libraries and 200 classroom libraries with open shelves and 2,000 books were set up in 68 government schools in Lahore and Bahawalpur districts, thanks to an agreement between ITA and Room to Read (RtR), a California-based non-profit organisation that seeks to promote literacy and gender equality in education in many Afro-Asian countries in the latter's own languages. ITA has also been taking initiatives to boost children's book publishing in Pakistan. It instituted the Young Authors' Awards a few years ago to encourage children with writing skills to write books. Promising authors were provided mentoring by Rumana Husain, a writer, an illustrator of 75 books and co-founder of the Bookgroup.

The RtR agreement goes much further. In the first phase, Rumana as team leader selected 28 English books from RtR's cloud collection and had them published in our languages. They became instant hits. The next phase promises to be more significant; it will induct local publishers, writers, illustrators and editors into the children's book industry. Training workshops have been conducted by RtR's resource person and 15 titles are in the pipeline; 6,000 copies of each will be printed to be distributed free of cost to public and low-fee schools. The publishers will be allowed to print and sell more than the stipulated number at affordable prices.

The project has made remarkable progress in just three years and should succeed if expanded exponentially, especially to higher levels. Promoting the culture of reading among children calls for the deep engagement of 'book mentors', including principals, teachers and librarians. They have been trained by RtR and a library period has been included in the timetable. But the real challenge is to get teachers genuinely interested in reading, which is not a solitary activity as is widely believed. It has to be followed by an interactive discussion between the participants who are also engaged with the book. The book culture is a collective pursuit to encourage further reading. That is why the success of the project will ultimately depend on the mentors.

Rooted in evidence

Arif Azad

In our times, in line with the ascendancy of empirical evidence in global policy frameworks, nations are embarking on a new chapter of governance, driven by data, research, and real-world insights. Their 'evidence-based policymaking' means that better utilisation of evidence and research can help save lives, reduce poverty and optimise limited resources.

One such case is that of Pakistan. Despite a rich history and a concentrated focus on policy research matters, evidence-based policymaking is less practised. Reasons range from the urgent necessity of delivering on political manifestos without waiting for the slow evidence-generation processes, non-availability of relevant evidence and research, and underutilised research departments, to research-policy gaps and lack of sustained political and institutionalised will to erect policymaking on the foundation of concrete data. However, these challenges are being addressed. At the heart of Pakistan's evolving governance paradigm is practising evidence-based policymaking. Policies must be anchored in credible research, ensuring they are not only politically aspirational but also grounded in reality. Two domains where this approach is making its presence felt are social protection and social health protection.

This fresh approach is evident in the policy matrix at the federal and provincial levels. The matrix at both levels retains a vision centred on citizen welfare. The Benazir Income Support Programme, for instance, is not just a policy initiative but, as borne out by its philosophy of focusing on a safety net for the people, is also a reflection of a commitment to the most vulnerable. Similarly, the Sehat Card initiative has been a tangible stride towards broader universal health coverage, with a view to bringing quality healthcare within the reach of every Pakistani. And yet, despite sound intentions and efforts, the spectrum of policy ambition stretching from conceptualisation to on-ground realisation is replete with challenges. At the centre of these challenges is the need for continuous feedback loops, agile policy adaptability to new research and evidence, and most importantly, a culture of ongoing research and insights into policymaking processes.

The Research Hub, that focuses on social protection and social health protection, represents a strategic answer to this challenge. Conceptualised as a nexus, this new initiative brings together Pakistan's eminent research institutions, NGOs, development partners and policy architects from various areas including KP, Punjab and the federal government. A collaborative approach is stressed, where research agendas are co-developed and a balance between academic pursuits and real-world policy exigencies is maintained.

The initiative comes at a time of a global momentum towards increasing evidence in policymaking (as also evidenced in the formation of the multi-nation Global Evidence Commission). The usefulness of a collaborative research approach can be seen in its first study on the population's willingness to participate as co-contributors towards the health insurance programme in KP. The study offers insights into people's perceptions about the programme, and allows decision-makers to fine-tune modalities to make the programme financially sustainable.

Such research projects, based on evidence-based policy research in health, can help health managers shape their respective programmes to absorb the financial squeeze while keeping their nets wide and inclusive.

An earlier multi-country initiative, Strengthening Evidence Use for Development Impact, has focused on increasing the use of evidence in policymaking in Uganda, Ghana and Pakistan. Its flagship report on policymaking in the areas of child labour, education and economic development in Pakistan spotlighted the centrality of using evidence. But there was no further follow-up.

The Global Evidence Commission, in its 2022 report and the follow-up 2023 update, further reinforced the importance of improving the use of evidence by formalising domestic evidence-support systems, leveraging global evidence architecture and placing evidence at the heart of policymaking at all levels. In addition to promoting a culture of evidence-based policy making in line with the recommendations of the Global Evidence Commission, there is an urgent need for more studies in other policy sectors such as education, housing and the environment to broaden the practice of on-demand evidence generation in Pakistan.

Ukraine's military says Russia launched its largest drone attack since the start of the invasion

Monitoring Desk
KYIV: Russia on Saturday morning launched its most intense drone attack on Ukraine since the beginning of its full-scale invasion in 2022, targeting the Ukrainian capital, military officials said.

In total, Russia launched 75 Iranian-made Shahed drones against Ukraine, of which 74 were destroyed by air defenses, Ukraine's air force said.

"Kyiv was the main target," Ukrainian Air Force Commander Mykola Oleschuk wrote on his Telegram channel.

The attack was "the most massive air attack by drones on Kyiv," said Serhii Popko, head of the Kyiv city administration. Ukrainian air force spokesman Yuriy Ilnat confirmed later that the air defenses shot down 66 air targets over the capital and surrounding region throughout the morning.

At least five civilians were wounded in the hours-long assault, which saw several buildings damaged by falling debris from downed drones, including a kindergarten. The wounded included an 11-year-old child, according to Kyiv Mayor Vitali Klitschko.

In the city's Solomiansky district, debris left a crater in the courtyard of a residential area, and the windows of a nearby building were blown out. Residents, most of them elderly, received medical attention at the scene. Others took shelter in a nearby subway station. As people were clearing up debris and broken glass in the neighborhood, the hum of a fresh wave of drones could be heard nearby.

The assault on Kyiv began at 4 a.m., local time, continuing in waves for more than six hours, and caused power outages in 77 residential buildings and 120 institutions, according to Popko. Ukraine's Energy Ministry said 17,000 people were without power in the Kyiv region as a result of the attack, noting that four power lines were damaged.

WHO says Gaza's health system must be protected as disease spreads

Monitoring Desk
GENEVA: The World Health Organization (WHO) on Wednesday called for Gaza's vulnerable health infrastructure to be safeguarded as the war-torn enclave faces an increased risk of epidemics and challenges in detecting infectious diseases.

A fragile truce agreement between Israel and Hamas last week has allowed WHO and aid organizations to increase their deliveries of essential supplies but these have been far from enough to meet the needs of Gaza's 2.3 million people. Speaking at a press conference in Geneva, World Health Organization Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said only 15 of Gaza's 36 hospitals were still functioning and were completely overwhelmed.

"Of the 25 hospitals north of the Wadi Gaza (river) before the conflict began, only three are functioning at the most basic level, but they lack fuel, water and food," Tedros said.

"The remaining health system capacity must be protected, supported and expanded."

WHO has sounded the alarm about the spread of infectious disease in Gaza, where the internal displacement of the population has caused overcrowding in shelters and other temporary living facilities.

The agency has noted a staggering increase in cases of diarrhoea, especially among infants and children, and detected "very serious signals around acute jaundice syndrome" in the enclave.

Israeli forces kill seven Palestinians in West Bank, Palestinian officials say

Monitoring Desk
JENIN: Israeli forces killed seven Palestinians, including two minors and at least one gunman, in the occupied West Bank late on Saturday and early Sunday, medics and local sources said. The West Bank, among territories where Palestinians seek statehood, has experienced a surge in violence parallel to the Israel-Hamas war in the Gaza Strip, now in its eighth week. Five of the overnight deaths occurred in the city of Jenin, which the Israeli military said it raided to detain a Palestinian wanted for alleged involvement in a lethal West Bank ambush in August as well as 20 other suspects. During the raid, Israeli forces "engaged with armed terrorists and killed five of them", the military said in a statement. The Jenin Brigades, a local armed group, said its fighters battled the Israeli troops. It did not immediately provide details on any casualties, but local witnesses said at least one of the Palestinians killed in Jenin was a known Brigades member.

Erdogan to visit Budapest next month as Turkey and Hungary hold up Sweden's membership in NATO

Monitoring Desk
BUDAPEST: Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan will visit Hungary's capital in December, his second trip to Budapest this year at a time when both countries remain the only NATO members not to have ratified Sweden's accession into the trans-Atlantic military alliance.

During his visit on Dec. 18, Erdogan will take part in a meeting of the Hungarian-Turkish Strategic Cooperation Council, and celebrate the 100th anniversary of the opening of diplomatic ties between the two countries, Bertalan Havasi, the press chief for Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban, told local news outlet ATV in a report broadcast on Monday. Havasi didn't immediately respond to further questions from The Associated Press on Tuesday about the trip.

It wasn't clear whether Erdogan and Orban would discuss Sweden's NATO membership, which has been delayed for more than a year by Hungary and Turkey. All 31 NATO allies must endorse the accession of a new member.

Erdogan's government has delayed Sweden's ratification over accusations that Stockholm is too soft on Kurdish militants and other groups Turkey considers to be security threats. But Hungary has expressed no such concrete concerns.

Monitoring Desk
BRASILIA: Brazilian President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva said on Monday he will appoint his Justice Minister, Flavio Dino, to a Supreme Court seat that has been vacant since the retirement of Justice Rosa Weber in late September.

UK gov't steps in to stop Telegraph deal

Monitoring Desk
LONDON: Britain's media minister said on Thursday she would intervene in the acquisition of the Telegraph Media Group by Abu Dhabi-backed RedBird IMI, on public interest grounds as it might impact the accurate presentation of news or free expression of opinion. The right-leaning Daily Telegraph broadsheet and Spectator magazine, favourites of politicians in the leading Conservative Party, are being sold after Lloyds Banking Group in June seized control following a long-running dispute with former owners, the Barclay family. But the government told RedBird in the letter that the minister was concerned about the potential for it to influence the Telegraph's operations.

"My Department has today written to the Barclay family and RedBird IMI, the current and proposed owners of Telegraph Media Group (TMG), to inform them that I will be issuing a Public Interest Intervention Notice (PIIN)" media minister Lucy Frazer said in a statement.

BTTN hosts Book ceremony titled "Security Imperative-Pakistan's Nuclear Deterrence, Diplomacy"

QUETTA (APP): Balochistan Think Tank Network (BTTN) hosted the Book Launch Ceremony of the book titled, "The Security Imperative-Pakistan's Nuclear Deterrence and Diplomacy" authored by Ambassador Zamir Akram, on Friday here. The Chief Guest of the event was Lieutenant General @ Khalid Ahmed Kidwai, Advisor National Command Authority. The event was graced by Vice Chancellors of different Universities across Balochistan.

Ali Abbas, Research Officer at BTTN was the moderator of the Ceremony. In his welcome remarks, the Head of BTTN applauded Ambassador Zamir Akram for his valuable contribution to the field of nuclear diplomacy throughout his career of 38 years.

He highlighted that diplomacy has always been the first line of defence, but the war between nuclear powers will be so suicidal that diplomacy acquired a far greater role than ever before in history.

He said that this book addresses the perceptions of nuclear deterrence and diplomacy. Dr Beemish in her appraisal highlighted that this book unfolds the narrative of Pakistan's quest for security through credible nuclear deterrence in the light of diplomacy.

She further added that for Pakistan to go nuclear, the journey was tedious, those opposed to the Pakistani program used all strategies including denial of technology, economic sanctions, military threats, political coercion, and a rabid vilification campaign to block Pakistan's inexorable advance.

She said that Pakistani leadership refused to buckle under pressure resulting in the persistence, faith, and belief that nuclear deterrence was essential for our National Security.

Dr Zafar Khan added that this insightful book delves into Pakistan's Nuclear Diplomacy and highlights the doctrinal changes over the time in case of South Asia, and how Pakistan's full spectrum deterrence plays a vital role in ensuring strategic stability against India.

He concluded his speech with the remarks that this book stands out to be the first that presents a diplomatic view of Pakistan's Nuclear Program and contributes to the discourse of deterrence and nuclear diplomacy by emphasizing Pakistan's position in the global nuclear order.

Miss Hananah Zarrar in her appraisal shed light on the one significant agenda discussed in the book that is non-proliferation and arms control.

She said that the book rationally projects Pakistan's stance amid global non-proliferation efforts and discriminatory policies as compared to India. She mentioned the Foreign Office's role in the nuclear journey of Pakistan and added that this book is a significant addition to the academic writings about the ideas of nuclear deterrence, non-proliferation, arms control, and nuclear diplomacy as well as it projects Pakistan's position in global nuclear order over the decades.

She concluded that another aspect that gives this book a unique status is that it gives a diplomatic view of the nuclear weapon program and nuclear safety and security debate of Pakistan and would serve as a weightage to stress

Pakistan's stance, internationally.

Presenting his book, Ambassador Zamir Akram discussed its focus and added that the book explores how political instability and economic weakness in a country can lead to security challenges, both domestically and internationally.

Referring to its online availability, he highlighted that, this year the book was recently removed from online repositories.

The point is that there is something in this book that certain people would not appreciate becoming public, he said. He further stressed that the domain of security is not limited to nuclear technology but rather extends to the domain of cyber security and Artificial Intelligence specifically considering Indian advancement in these fields.

President directs MCB to investigate corrupt officials involved in scam

ISLAMABAD (APP): President Dr Arif Alvi on Friday directed the Muslim Commercial Bank (MCB) to investigate and initiate criminal proceedings, including the registration of FIRs, against corrupt bank officials of Gojra Road Branch, Jhang.

The bank officials were involved in bank fraud.

He also directed MCB to return Rs 3.093 million to a customer who had been swindled out of his money through the connivance of a tea boy and bank officials posted at the branch.

The president gave these directions while deciding upon a representation filed by MCB against the decision of the Banking Mohtasib directing the bank to pay the complainant a sum of Rs 3.093 million.

As per details, Muhammad Munir Ahmed etc (complainants) were maintaining a joint account at the MCB's Gojra Road Branch, Jhang Sadder.

They complained that upon reconciliation of the account in March 2021, they found a huge shortfall in their account balance and that 292 deposit slips totalling Rs 3,941,660/- were not credited to their account.

They also held valid deposit slips duly signed and stamped by the bank officials for the deposits.

They approached the bank for the redressal of their complaint but the Bank rejected their claim on the basis that a tea boy, posted at the branch, used to visit their laboratory for cash collection and the deposit slips were affixed with a "Utility Bills Received" stamp instead of "cash received" stamp.

They further contended that the tea boy was employed by a third-party organization that had already lodged an FIR against him.

The bank stated that it was not responsible for the personal dealings of the customer with the tea boy which took place outside the Branch premises.

Feeling aggrieved, they approached the Banking Mohtasib for redressal of their grievance.

The Banking Mohtasib accepted the complaint and directed the Bank to credit the complainant's account with a sum of PKR 3.093 million and report compliance within 40 days. Subsequently, the Bank filed a representation against the Mohtasib's decision with the President.

The president conducted a personal hearing of the case at Aiwan-e-Sadr and rejected the Bank's representation.

In his decision, the president stated that the Bank's denial of the claims of the Complainants on the ground that the deposit slip neither had the required "Cash Received" stamp nor was validated with any system entry was not tenable as the receipt was a bona fide document and admittedly issued under the signature of the bank's authorized Teller Services Officers (TSO) who had been penalized in terms of dismissal from Bank's service.
