Interim Govt. foiled agenda of country's enemies about keeping it away from democracy, asserts Jan Achakzai

Caretaker Minister for Information urges losing candidates to accept election results demonstrating sportsman spirit; relevant forum may be approached if anyone has objection

Independent Report

QUETTA: The caretaker Provincial Minister for Information, Jan Achakzai has categorically stated that the state and interim government has foiled the agenda of Pakistan's enemies regarding keeping the country away from democracy by conducting general elections.

The nation, Pak army, Police, paramilitary forces, Election Commission, administration and all other institutions deserve appreciation on this historic success, maintained the caretaker Minister while addressing a hurriedly called press conference at the Civil Secretariat on Sunday morning.

Jan Achakzai expressed the hope that the winning candidates would try to come up to the expectations of general elections. At the same time, he also urged those could not succeed in the elections to accept the results of elections demonstrating sportsman spirit.

However, if any of them have objections on the results, one can contact the relevant forums, adding he pleaded.

The Minister Information said that it is the enemies' agenda to suffer the country from chaos and lawlessness. He said that taking law into hands in simplicity and ignorance is nothing but tantamount to play in hands of the enemies. He said that we know that some elements are running on agenda of the enemies by fanning the flames in the situation and adding he termed them the "Raw" agents.

He feared that some simple people would also come in the tricks of these elements. However, we want to tell them they would be equally responsible for if their act harmed democracy in the country, Jan Achakzai warned.

He said that we have to protect the country, democracy and democratic institutions.

To a query about delay in results of some constituencies of the province, the Minister maintained that the delay in results was caused mainly due to the big areas and logistic issues. He said that results of elections are declared late because of the logistic issues.

More uncertainty

It appears that a coalition government is in the offing, as no single party has enough seats to form a government.

After his 'victory speech' some days ago, PML-N supremo Nawaz Sharif said his was the single largest party, and called on other political leaders to initiate discussions and negotiate a way forward. Soon after, there were reports that PPP's Asif Ali Zardari and PML-N's Shehbaz Sharif held a meeting, an indication that the two leaders, despite their differences in recent months, are attempting to chart a way forward.

Of course, the role of parties such as MQM-P and other smaller parties, is key as they too will lend support to reach the magic number of seats. The PML-N is optimistic that two dozen or more independents will join their ranks, and is banking on its relationship with different parties to show a victorious front.

As the numbers game plays out, the country once again finds itself in a familiar place — one that is steeped in political uncertainty. In recent months, the PPP and PML-N have had an acrimonious relationship. The PML-N is annoyed that PPP distanced itself from the PDM government's decisions, and that it was left to face the brunt of the public's wrath over increasing inflation. Its key members also do not trust Mr Zardari.

Similarly, the PPP has been vocal in its criticism of the N-League, with its chairman Bilawal Bhutto-Zardari taking potshots at Mr Nawaz Sharif during his campaign, and even telling this newspaper in an interview that he was "disappointed" in the former prime minister.

With these misgivings, how will this motley crew sit together in parliament? Whose agenda will take priority? And how will they bring the stability, reforms and leadership the country so badly needs? More importantly, did the public really turn up in large numbers to vote to be ruled by PDM 2.0?

As the wheeling and dealing proceeds, two things are clear: one, that however the PML-N cobbles this coalition together, its 'victory' will be more bitter than sweet. Without the outcome it had hoped for, it is now left to perform that uneasy dance of give and take for political survival. This is certainly not the fantasy Mr Sharif harboured when he returned to Pakistan after four years abroad. The second is that such a government is always vulnerable to outside forces. As we saw previously, the PTI-led coalition government was held together by an external glue, and its days were numbered when that glue did not stick. Forming such a post-election alliance is not unique to Pakistan, as other countries witness similar events and end up having weak governments. But in our case, the vulnerability to external forces further complicates an already fragile democratic process.

Hope is everything

Aizaz Ahmad Chaudhry

Pakistan is in the grip of bad news. While much of it is fake because the detractors of Pakistan are at work, some of the bad news is also real. Decades of bad governance has shaken the confidence of the people in the rulers they elect or even in the system which brings them to power. The elite capture of the country has left the teeming majority wondering if this country can deliver even the basic amenities of life. A vast segment of the population is slipping below the poverty line. The rich are getting richer, the poor poorer. Society is also deeply polarised. All this bad news has created a sense of despondency.

How did we reach this sorry state? Foremost, we must recognise that whatever has happened is of our own doing. We don't work hard enough to deserve the riches we aspire to. Our political governance has failed to rise to the expectations of the people. We spend more than we earn and evade taxes. Corruption is rampant. Moreover, for far too long, our rulers have looked for easy money from outside the country. All through the decades, we have preferred to leverage our strategic location rather than build our productive capacities.

We also want others to adjust their stance towards us rather than changing ourselves. For instance, we expect India to reduce its hostility towards Pakistan, Afghanistan to be more friendly than it is, China to invest more, the Saudis to liberally share their abundant wealth with us, and America to maintain a steady partnership with our country. In short, we want all our key relationships to change in the way we desire them to. But this is not how inter-state relations work. It is Pakistan which should adjust to the evolving global and regional geopolitics, and not the other way round. A ship cannot change the direction of the wind; it must adapt its sails to continue its journey.

That means that a change of attitude is needed in how we Pakistanis see ourselves as a nation and how we view the outside world. The Creator has been more than generous in granting nature's bounties to the territories that constitute today's Pakistan.

The country is the 10th largest producer of rice in the world, the eighth leading producer of wheat, and the fifth largest producer of sugarcane. Our land is home to the three highest mountain ranges, and has an irrigation system that is both efficient and extensive.

According to the Trade Development Authority of Pakistan, the country has the sixth largest reserves of marble, the second largest salt mines, the fifth largest reserves of copper and gold, the second largest coal deposits, and vast reserves of gypsum.

With such abundant wealth and a young energised population, we have every reason to be hopeful about the future of our country. Even during the harshest of times for the Muslims of India under the British occupation, our founding fathers never lost hope. Allama Iqbal's advice to us was as valid then as it is today. To translate his words: 'Don't despair, as despair is the decline of knowledge and wisdom, the hope of mard-i-momin is among the secrets of God'.

As a new elected government takes office, it must lift up the morale of the nation by setting the stage for good governance. First and foremost, we need to stabilise political governance, which is so fractured. A new charter of democracy and tolerance is required, which provides for treating political opponents with respect and dignity, for today's opponents could be tomorrow's rulers. No one should consider himself or herself as an angel or a patriot, while treating opponents as evil and corrupt.

Second, there needs to be a much stronger commitment to local governments. The de-volution of power and resources agreed upon in 18th Amendment should not have stopped at provinces, but needs to reach the grassroots level.

Third, a charter of economy is required to forge a consensus among political parties on key economic issues and priorities.

Fourth, national security should be viewed more comprehensively than it was in the past, with equal attention being given to traditional, economic and human securities. To that end, the new government should announce its national security policy, a sequel to the one issued in January 2022, establish a national security council (not committee), and appoint a full-time national security adviser.

Fifth, on the external front, we must view all our relationships, including with neighbours, through the lens of economic benefit to Pakistan and by building stakes in the stability of Pakistan. We must engage with, but not depend on, the outside world, because the fountains of wealth and prosperity lie within. -- Courtesy Dawn

'This is us too'

Muna Khan

Imran Khan and his supporters, according to the Twitterati, are 'the worst thing to happen to society' — they've ruined tehzeeb, family get-togethers, WhatsApp chats, marriages, friendships, even diets. I am, of course, being a little facetious, but do you recognise yourself as someone who believes that this or is perhaps the victim of this rhetoric? Wherever you land, do you believe we can move forward?

I'm here to offer a sliver of hope.

In 2013 and 2018, when I went to vote in Karachi, I was surrounded by PTI supporters, excited and assured of victory. Because we had to wait a while in line, people got to chatting. There was a lot of disbelief when someone in line said they weren't voting for PTI. Or that they weren't voting for the first time. "No educated person could vote for the MQM," the woman in front of me told another in 2013. "You're destroying Pakistan's chance of survival by voting for Jibrin Nasir," a lady told me in 2018. As an aside: I think it's time to retire this 'save Pakistan' idea. We need saving from our misconceptions, nay delusions.

A few days ago, as I stood in line to cast my vote, there was a lot of camaraderie as PTI supporters welcomed each other in the line, but when others said they were voting for Jamaat, no one baulked. Everyone agreed you should vote for who you want. One elderly woman told another younger woman that she wouldn't tell her who she was voting for because "mujhey gaaliyan parein ge" (I will receive abuse). That woman said no, it should not be like that, you don't have to reply, we just have to vote. Even though the mood was defiant, it was also jovial.

I'm not that naïve to think people have decided to reclaim polite discourse, but I do believe this tiny exchange points to a people's awakening and then mobilising to challenge the status quo. I believe the way people came out to vote — and for who — is evidence of this, too. People are tired of broken systems; nothing is working and the impact of polarisation has caused alarm. To be little people's choices or heap scorn on them serves no purpose. Having said that, today's angry voters must accept that their stolen mandate was, in previous elections, someone else's stolen mandate.

This division across party lines benefits those angling for power at whatever cost, who know they have accomplices to help them achieve their goal. This habit of a sprinkle of engineering here, a speck of it there — as happens every time — will only take you so far.

This is why I feel hopeful the anger will help bring people together to defy the odds. We've seen glimmers of it in constituencies like Parachinar, where Shias and Sunnis united to vote their opponent out. They rejected the status quo and the hatred that sectarianism has created here. To remind, we have spent more time living together peacefully — commemorating our different sects' occasions for example — than engaged in hatred.

Another group that continues to defy the powerful is the media. As a keen follower, and sometime practitioner, I was thrilled to watch the reporting and analysis of the clear criticism of the election process — there was nothing ambiguous about it. This must be celebrated because an independent media is vital for democracy to function. The more people see themselves and their issues on mainstream media, the less they will rely on propagandists on YouTube.

A special mention must be made of the journalists and analysts who suffered from PTI's abusive campaigns, but did not let that impact their professionalism. I am here to remind party supporters that no one cheered Imran Khan's conviction the way Nawaz Sharif's was celebrated by journalists in kitchens and bathrooms. I will also remind you how everyone slammed the iddat case and conviction, calling it morally reprehensible. It is time for all supporters to frankly grow up and learn to deal with criticism — as has been our way in the past. We must find our way back to disagreeing without being disagreeable in all fields. Our elders must show us that way.

I believe the very platforms that caused polarisation can also reduce it. I see a glimmer of hope there too. Independent candidate Jibrin Nasir, who lost this election, has, along with other lawyers, created a 'Safeguard Karachi's Votes' legal cell and is offering aid to candidates across party lines who feel their mandate was stolen. ANP's Samar Bilour taking a bouquet of flowers to PTI's Meena Khan to congratulate him on his win is one example. This in-person exchange, versus the notable congratulatory tweets by other politicians, reminds me of who we are: good people who want to live in harmony. -- Courtesy Dawn

PDM economic management led to sharp rise in per capita debt

Monitoring Desk
ISLAMABAD: A new legally mandated fiscal policy statement has revealed the worst economic management by the coalition government of the Pakistan Democratic Movement, resulting in expenditures over Rs2.2 trillion higher than budgeted and a 25% increase in the debt burden for every citizen.

The Ministry of Finance's Fiscal Policy Statement 2024 showed a sharp rise in the debt burden during the fiscal year 2022-23, the period when PDM ruled Pakistan. The debt burden of every citizen increased by 25.2% to Rs271,624 by the end of the previous fiscal year. In absolute terms, every person's debt burden rose by Rs54,500 within one year, according to the statement. A year ago, the per person debt burden was Rs216,925, according to the Ministry of Finance report. The statement is prepared under the Fiscal Responsibility and Debt Limitation Act (FRDL) and will be placed before the new National Assembly. Although the Ministry of Finance has not officially released the statement, the deadline to present it was January 31st.

The gross public debt jumped to Rs62.9 trillion by June 2023, indicating an increase since then. A more than one-fourth increase in per capita debt in one year signifies the speed at which the country is sinking under the debt burden.

The report stated that the key factors responsible for this rise are interest payments on debt and the exchange rate devaluation effect.

The Ministry of Finance has calculated the per capita debt based on the assumption of a population of 231.5 million people. If the new population census numbers are considered, then the per person debt burden would be Rs260,387, up by Rs44,462 or 21%.

Pakistan was ruled by the PDM from April 2022 to August 2023—an alliance of about a dozen political parties. The large alliance made economic decision-making difficult, and these parties fought hard for thinning fiscal resources. A large and unsustainable Public Sector Development Programme (PSDP) was also the result.

Election 2024 signifies people unshakable trust in democracy

PESHAWAR (APP): The Election 2024 results have signified the people's unshakable trust in the electoral process as well as the strong parliamentary system and have pinned high expectations on their elected representatives to address their problems besides taking the country forward on the road to progress and development, experts said. "The people of Pakistan delivered the verdict on February 8, 2024, and now it is up to elected representatives, institutions and political leadership to accept their decision imperative to carry the ship of democracy forward and take the country out of the shabby economic situation," said Professor Dr. A.H. Hilali, ex-Chairman Political Science Department, University of Peshawar while talking to APP on Sunday. The split electoral mandate which was given to mainstream political parties on February 8 is a manifestation of pluralism in the country's politics besides signifying that people of Pakistan wanted resolution of their problems and country's challenges through a national government represented by all political parties, he said. "Pakistan is currently facing enormous challenges including shabby economy, terrorism, security issues, price hike, inflation and climate change and no political party can address it single-handedly, and that is why people of Pakistan had given split mandate to political parties for resolution of these issues amicably," he said. By taking lessons from the past; he said that political leadership should immediately sit together and form a coalition government as quickly as possible to take the country out of economic challenges by accepting each other's mandate wholeheartedly. Independent

Red Sea crisis not yet having 'significant' impact on global economy - IMF

WASHINGTON (Online): The Houthi rebel attacks on vessels in the Red Sea have had a significant impact on insurance and shipping rates, but have so far not affected global economic growth prospects, Kristalina Georgieva, the managing director of the IMF, said in an interview with the Washington Post this week. "It adds pressure on prices, but not yet to the point that our projections for inflation globally will be corrected upwards," the IMF chief said, adding that "for now, this has implications, but not of the magnitude that would significantly derail growth projections for the world economy." She noted that in January 2024, traffic through the Suez Canal, a critical maritime trade route connecting the Mediterranean Sea to the Red Sea, plunged by nearly a half versus last January. However, according to Georgieva, the impact of this drop in traffic is more "localized," and most severe for Egypt, which relies on revenues from the waterway traffic and is currently losing roughly $100 million a month. Still, Georgieva warned that "surprises" like the Red Sea shipping crisis are making long-term growth prospects for the world economy "bleak." The IMF recently slightly updated its economic projections, and now expects the global economy to grow by 3.1% this year, but, according to Georgieva, this figure is still "weak by historical standards" if compared to the average growth of 3.8% in the decade before the Covid-19 pandemic. "It is a signal that we are in a more shock-prone world - surprises of this type... mean we have to be in better position to face these repetitive shocks," she warned, suggesting that fiscal authorities around the world should build "buffers" to withstand crises.

Palestinians brace for Israeli assault on their last refuge in Gaza

Monitoring Desk
GAZA STRIP: Israeli air strikes killed 117 Palestinians during the past 24 hours, the health ministry in Gaza Strip said on Saturday as over a million Palestinians cramping into the border city of Rafah await a full-blown offensive, with nowhere left to run. Unlike in previous Israeli assaults on the besieged territory's cities, when the military ordered civilians to flee south, no other relatively uncaptured area remains in the tiny Gaza. Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's office said it had ordered the military to develop a plan to destroy "four Hamas battalions deployed there", despite repeated warnings from several countries and aid agencies that civilians in large numbers could die. With the latest addition of 117 killings over the past 24 hours, the death toll in the besieged territory has surpassed 28,000 during the past four months. "Any Israeli incursion in Rafah means massacres, means destruction. People are filling every inch of the city and we have nowhere to go," said Rezik Salah, 35, who had to flee his Gaza City home.

Trump comments on Russia, NATO 'appalling and unhinged' - White House

WASHINGTON (Internews): The White House on Saturday rejected comments made by former U.S. President Donald Trump about not protecting NATO allies from a potential Russian invasion as "appalling and unhinged." Trump, appearing to recount a meeting with NATO leaders during a political rally in South Carolina on Saturday, quoted the president of "a big country" that he did not name as asking, "Well sir if we don't pay, and we're attacked by Russia - will you protect us?" "I said: 'You didn't pay? You're delinquent?' He said: 'Yes, let's say that happened. No I would not protect you. In fact I would encourage them to do whatever the hell they want. You gotta pay.'" White House spokesperson Andrew Bates, asked about Trump's comments, said, "Encouraging invasions of our closest allies by murderous regimes is appalling and unhinged - and it endangers American national security, global stability and our economy at home." The NATO treaty contains a provision that guarantees mutual defense of member states if one is attacked. Trump, frontrunner for the Republican presidential nomination, was a fierce critic of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization when he was president, repeatedly threatening to pull out of the alliance. He cut defense funding to NATO and frequently complained that the United States was paying more than its fair share.

Indonesia presidential frontrunner skips press freedom event

JAKARTA (Internews): Two of Indonesia's three presidential contenders pledged to protect press freedom in the world's third-largest democracy at a weekend event that frontrunner Prabowo Subianto didn't attend. The event came just days ahead of the Feb. 14 poll, and as some Indonesians raise concerns over an erosion of the country's hard-won democratic freedoms. Criticism over political interference has been levelled especially at outgoing President Joko Widodo, who has given tacit support to Prabowo. In the past, incumbents wrapping up their second term as president have remained neutral. On the last day of campaigning, ex-Jakarta governor Anies Baswedan and ex-Central Java governor Ganjar Pranowo signed the National Press Council's written declarations to uphold democracy and press freedom. It was unclear if Prabowo, represented at the Saturday event by the head of his campaign team, signed the declaration. His campaign did not respond to queries on the matter. Prabowo is projected by some opinion surveys to pip the 50% threshold needed to win the election in a single round. The former special forces commander, who is making his third run at the presidency, has long faced allegations of rights abuses during his time in the military. He denies the accusations, but critics have questioned Prabowo's commitment to protecting human rights. Prabowo's campaign chief, Rosan Roeslani, said at the event: "Freedom of the press is something that we absolutely must maintain and improve... because it is one of the spearheads of our democracy."

PTI alleges Form 47 of 18 NA seats falsely changed by returning officers

Monitoring Desk
ISLAMABAD: The PTI said on Sunday that the Form 47 of 18 National Assembly (NA) seats allegedly won by the party were "falsely changed" by returning officers (RO).
Thursday's general election had seen mobile services suspended and a delay in the announcement of the preliminary results, an exercise which was extended till the weekend.
On Friday, following the victory of candidates with its support, the PTI had claimed it had become the single largest party in the Centre and two provinces and vowed to get back its iconic 'bat' symbol.
In an AI-generated message on Imran Khan's official X account, a message attributed to the erstwhile party chief congratulated supporters on winning the 2024 general elections and securing a two-thirds majority. The message also echoed allegations of rigging, claiming that the party was winning "170 seats" according to Form 45s.

Separately, PTI Central Information Secretary Raouf Hasan had lamented that when the results started pouring in late on Thursday night and the trend clearly showed that PTI was taking a clear lead in the Centre, KP, and Punjab, the "poll manipulators" first slowed down the process of announcement of results and subsequently halted the process altogether to "tamper with the results".
"PTI candidates were clearly winning with a huge margin in several constituencies, including Islamabad at night, but ironically, their clear victory was converted into defeat in the morning because political engineering was going on behind the scenes," he had said. It should be mentioned that political parties, including PTI, Jamaat-i-Islami and Tehreek-i-Labbaik Pakistan, have also been staging protests against alleged rigging in the polls.

ECP bars ROs to issue final results of 10 NA & 16 PAs seats

ISLAMABAD (INP): The Election Commission of Pakistan (ECP) has barred the Returning Officers (ROs) to issue the final results of several National Assembly and provincial assembly seats. A four-member bench headed by chief election commissioner held the hearing of alleged alteration in the election result of NA-48.
"We were ahead with the lead of 50,000 votes as per the Form-45 but the Returning Officer issued the Form-47 and changed our victory into defeat," the counsel of PTI candidate Ali Bukhari argued.
The ECP issued notice to the Istehkam-e-Pakistan Party backed candidate Raja Khurram Nawaz and barred the RO to issue the final notification of NA-47 and NA-48.
Meanwhile, ECP also barred the ROs to issue the final results of PK-73, PK-79, PK-80 and PK-82. PTI backed Taimoor Jhagra and Kamran Bangash had challenged the results from PK-79 and PK-82 respectively.
Moreover, the results of NA-28, NA-49 Attock, NA-50 Attock, NA-55 Rawalpindi, NA-63 and NA-65 were also challenged in the ECP.
Talking about the seats of provincial assemblies, the results of PB-11, PP-20, PP-14, PP-16, PP-31, PP-33 and PP-59 were also challenged in the ECP.
The ECP barred the ROs to issue the final results of 10 NA and 16 provincial assembly seats.

ISLAMABAD (APP): Pakistan Sunday strongly condemned yesterday's heinous terrorist attack against the UAE military trainers and under training Somali soldiers at a military base in Mogadishu.
In a statement the Foreign Office Spokesperson said, "We offer our deepest condolences to the governments and the people of the UAE and Bahrain and to the families of victims and pray for the early recovery of all the injured."

Khuhro says: No party alone can't form govt at Centre

LAARKANA (APP): Pakistan Peoples Party (PPP) President Nisar Khuhro on Sunday said that no political party was in a position to form a government alone at the Centre.
The PPP would try to form the government and if, otherwise, it would prefer to sit on the opposition benches in the Parliament, he said while talking to the media after offering Fataha at the graves of Bhutto family martyrs in Garhi Khudabakhsh Bhutto.
He said it was premature to comment about the government's formation at the Centre as negotiations between the parties in that regard were underway.
He viewed that as per the Constitution, the elected independent National Assembly members could not form the government on their own, they would have to join any party for the purpose.
To a question, Khuhro said those defeated in the elections should honour the mandate given to the PPP candidates by the people.
He said the PPP had never divided politics and would not do so in future. It would rather take the entire Sindh Assembly members along for the sake of country's development, he added.
He said the PPP had won more assembly seats in the current election than 2018 as its government had served the people, and it would again come up to their expectations.

With a total of 305 seats, PTI has established a commanding presence in both the national and provincial legislative bodies, surpassing all other political contenders. Notably, the Election Commission has announced unofficial official results for 257 seats of the National Assembly.
Independent candidates backed by PTI have emerged as the largest group in the National Assembly, securing 95 seats, outnumbering other independent members by a significant margin.
The runner-up in the current electoral standings is the Muslim League-N, which has garnered 76 seats thus far, followed by the People's Party with 54 seats, and MQM Pakistan with 17 seats. Additionally, Muslim League-Q and JUI-

F have secured 3 seats each, while IPP has clinched 2 seats.
Responding to the released results, PTI spokesperson Rauf Hasan has raised allegations of seat misappropriation, asserting that approximately 60 seats have been unjustly taken away from their party. Promising to reclaim these seats through legal recourse, Hasan emphasized their commitment to presenting compelling evidence before tribunals and potentially the courts if necessary. He highlighted the absence of Form 47 in certain constituencies as a procedural hurdle, vowing to pursue all available legal avenues to secure their rightful share.
Furthermore, Hasan affirmed PTI's determination to uphold their party's legitimacy and safeguard against any attempts at electoral manipulation. He underscored the meticulous selection process for independent candidates, contrasting it with the alleged unethical practices of rival parties. With legal challenges looming, PTI remains resolute in their pursuit of electoral justice and preserving the integrity of democratic processes.

PTI backed candidates winning's seats snatched on gunpoint: Babar Awan

ISLAMABAD (INP): Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) leader Babar Awan addressed the media outside the Election Commission of Pakistan on Sunday stating that worst election rigging happened in the recently held general elections and alleged that number of seats that earlier won PTI backed candidates later snatched on gunpoint.
He stated that not only PTI but the entire world condemned and rejected the election day midnight horrible attempt of snatching PTI willing seats. Awan alleged that PML-N head Nawaz Sharif is attempting to secure victory through hidden hands since February 9, claiming that pre-poll rigging persisted for two years.
Babar Awan emphasized the controversial nature of the elections, labeling them as the most disputed in Pakistan's history.
He challenged the results in Sargodha and Faisalabad, asserting that PTI candidates emerged victorious in these constituencies. Furthermore, Awan called for the immediate release of PTI founder Imran Khan, urging the President to exercise the power of pardon.
Speaking passionately, Awan declared, "Nawaz Sharif gave a victory speech without a vote; we reject the results of February 9. The entire world has denounced these results, but Nawaz Sharif continues to exert force since February 9. We hold the majority with 179 seats, and we refuse to accept the decision of February 9."
Awan criticized the election process, drawing attention to the unorthodox victory speech by Nawaz Sharif. He stated, "One side was eggplant, and the other side was the billion-dollar man."
