Reactivating Nacta

Confronted with a complex wave of terrorist violence, the state has little choice but to 'restructure' the National Counter Terrorism Authority, as the interior minister stated on Wednesday. Mohsin Naqvi was attending a meeting at the Nacta headquarters on the day Baloch separatists stormed the Gwadar Port Authority Complex, while only a few days earlier, militants believed to be associated with the Hafiz Gul Bahadur group had staged a deadly attack, martyring security personnel in North Waziristan.

The current terrorist threat is varied both ideologically and geographically, and over the last few years, particularly after the Afghan Taliban's capture of Kabul in 2021, militants have been further emboldened and have staged a large number of attacks in Pakistan.

Formed in 2009 in the midst of an earlier terrorist insurgency, Nacta — though it is supposed to be the state's primary counterterrorism organ — has been largely sidelined by the rulers after initial successes against militancy. Though envisioned as a 'one-window operation' to corral national CT efforts, the agency has not been empowered with the tools necessary to deliver on its mandated goals. Instead, the CT effort has been dominated by the military and its intelligence apparatus. While the military undoubtedly has a central role to play in rooting out terrorism, the militarised CT approach has its limits, particularly in urban areas, where civilian law-enforcement bodies, and related long-term CT strategies, are required to complement kinetic efforts. It is also essential that while Nacta provides the operational framework, the ideological element of the CT effort is guided by the National Action Plan. NAP, formulated after the 2014 APS massacre, was updated in 2021; the interior minister also reiterated the state's resolve to implement the plan "at any cost".

NAP specifically mentions the reconciliation process in Balochistan, as well as reforms in KP's merged districts, in its latest iteration. These ideas must not remain on paper, and need to be implemented with full vigour if the state is to uproot militancy permanently. In both instances — Baloch separatism as well as religiously inspired militancy in KP — poverty, deprivation and the state's apparent disinterest in the welfare of the populations of these affected areas, have contributed to swelling the militants' ranks. Therefore, to address the considerable CT challenges, Nacta must be fully empowered to coordinate the state's fight against terrorism. Moreover, civilian LEAs, particularly the provincial counterterrorism departments, should be provided with funds, equipment and training to pre-empt terrorist violence and break militant networks. Along with kinetic measures, NAP should be implemented in letter and spirit. In particular, sectarian and extremist actors that remain active in society must be put out of business. These malignant forces provide the ideological background that produces the violent foot soldiers powering terrorist insurgencies.

Historically, the term 'generation' is used to explain relationships amongst family members — grandparents, parents and children. However, the word now alludes more to (six) social generations: the Silents (1925-1945), Boomers (1946-1964), Gen X (1965-1979), Millennials (1980-1994), Gen Z (1995-2012), and Gen Alpha (born after 2013). The era in which one is born sometimes changes one's deportment and personal attributes more than the family that brings him up.

The study of generations is a useful tool to understand history as well as look at the future. Historic perspectives associate generations with events in history; like the Vietnam War for Boomers; fears of nuclear war with Russia for Gen X; 9/11 for Millennials; and the Covid-19 pandemic for Gen Z. The problem with this approach is that it does not account for cultural changes encountered during the intervening years. Expressing one's views on politics by attending a protest or writing a letter to the editor in the past is now accomplished by the inscription of a few words on a smartphone. As opposed to major events like wars and pandemics that revolve in circles, these cultural changes are linear, moving year after year in the same direction. So, what drives this cultural change? The answer is technology.

In today's world, the way we think, live, communicate, and interact has been completely revolutionised by technology. As expressed by Prof Jean Twenge, this technological model of generations is a new generational theory for the modern world. Technology has shattered the spokes of the old generational cycle with everlasting impact on the world today by influencing our societal norms. According to this model, technology has made individualism possible. Mere existence was a challenge up until the 20th century, with almost no time for thinking about oneself in the absence of clean drinking water, refrigeration, automobiles, central heating and washing machines. It was a collective integral living effort by societies. In comparison, as technology has relieved us of the chores of life, we have more time to think of our aspirations.

In addition to the direct linear impact of technology, generational differences are better understood by two intertwined factors that define the 21st-century generation: individualism and a slower life ambit. Whereas the former focuses on the self, the latter pertains to longevity. Individualism has different implications in different world cultures. Whereas the individualistic culture of the US considers personal space and freedom and equality as important factors, inclusive cultures such as South Korea emphasise group consensus and abiding by the rules. Although every industrialised nation cannot be individualistic, every individualistic country is an industrialised nation. Individualism also promotes equality based on sex, race, ethnicity, and transgender status. Recently, equality has been one of the most important forces driving cultural generational change evident in the Civil Rights Movement, Black Lives Matter, #Me Too and transgender rights awareness.

Another cultural shift shaped by technology is the impact it has on society by making the average lifetime longer. Infant mortality has dropped from one in six in the late 1800s to one in 200 in 2020, resulting in an overall slower life course, as shown by a recent study utilising eight aging biomarkers where 40-59 years old Americans were two to three years and those from 60-79 years about four years younger biologically than the same age group in 1988-94. Today, fewer children are doing things on their own, teens are becoming less independent, young adults are postponing adult milestones, middle-aged people are younger, with 50 being the new 40 and people remaining healthier past retirement. Modern healthcare, birth control, labour-saving devices and a knowledge-based economy requiring more years of formal education are among the factors causing sluggish life curves. Propitiously, we live in the era of Big Data that can compare generations of the past with those of the present and get a glimpse of the future. Individuality in the current generation means choices based on personal preferences alone, whereas societies are interconnected and dependent on personal interactions. Since the surging popularity of social media, the lives of people of all ages have been affected, with the largest effects observed in younger people.

As a result, we see that their social and communication skill sets is different from those of older people; they prefer to stay indoors and do work from home. The technologically-advanced data-driven generation of today might create interesting political, workplace and domestic dimensions in future societies. As generations grow, so does the world. -- Courtesy Dawn

The true hero

Zubeida Mustafa

Pakistan enjoys the dubious distinction of being the fifth most populous state in the world. But unlike the four countries that precede it in population size, Pakistan has been unable to manage its demographic growth and economy to its advantage. The shocking revelation made by the census last year was that Pakistan's population had grown faster in the last five years. The annual growth rate was 2.55 per cent. It had been 2.4 pc in the 2017 census.

Other indicators are no better. The Pakistan Demographic and Health Survey 2017-2018 puts the total fertility rate at 3.6pc and the contraceptive prevalence rate at an appallingly low 34pc (which includes more than 10pc users of highly unreliable customary methods). The unmet need is 17pc. This data discredits the government's performance, and testifies to the disinterest of our rulers in improving the quality of life of the people.

There are many factors that account for the rapid rise in numbers. The most important is officialdom's reluctance to bring the population issue into the public discourse. There is no open debate on it. Along with this silence is the unwillingness of opinion-makers to take action against patriarchal structures and practices in our society. As a result, the status of women remains low. The UN has been convening international conferences periodically on population development. The Cairo conference of 1994 was a landmark one as it adopted the Programme of Action and for the first time there was a paradigm shift from controlling population as an economic compulsion to the human rights dimension of individual men and women. A Shirkatgah report describes the emphasis on education, especially for girls; gender equity; infant, child and maternal mortality reduction; the provision of universal access to reproductive health services, and the inclusion of family planning and sexual health in the programme to empower women and girls. This is one of the most reliable pathways to the improved well-being of all.

All this has been beyond Pakistan. In the pre-Zia 1970s, the population programme had made a reasonably good start. Population centres were scattered all over the country, and motivators and counsellors played an effective role in getting people to become acceptors. The population growth rate fell to 1.9pc. Then came a dark age for women and the progress achieved was reversed. Now I see light at the end of the population tunnel.

I often hear from people working in this sector that they meet women who confide in them that they do not want many children but their partners do not agree. So some seek to space their children on the quiet. But they are unsure if that is a wise thing to do given their men's demand for large families. Since women have traditionally been the focus of birth control strategies and male motivators have never been the forte of any population programme in Pakistan, this is creating an unrecognised dilemma.

Now we have an answer offered by a remarkable Lady Health Worker in Khero Dero. She is Mashkoora, a widow aged 43 and the mother of seven. Mashkoora has endeared herself to her clients. Called 'Maasi' by the women she has emerged as their sav-

our. Mashkoora was hired by the Ali Hasan Mangi Memorial Trust (AHMMT) as a motivator and counsellor to persuade women to space their children and have themselves sterilised if they already had a large family. Her achievement? In a span of two years, she has personally arranged for the tubal ligation of 144 women, made numerous couples acceptors and created a demand for family planning advice.

Mashkoora's real feat is her ability to talk to men and persuade them to be-co-me acceptors. I asked her how she manages this in our patriarchal society. She tells me she has no qualms about talking to men on the issue. She is persuasive and explains to the men the ill effects of frequent pregnancies on a woman's health, and worse still, the neglect children suffer from when there are too many of them. She says she reminds them of how it affects them adversely. Mashkoora may be illiterate but she is worldly-wise. She has educated her children and knows what would appeal to a man. For instance, she tells me that she introduces herself as Mashkoora from AHMMT. That is half the work done as all the people from the 44 villages she visits are beneficiaries of one or the other of the Trust's projects — house-building, toilets, solar panels, school, healthcare, micro-loans, etc. A bond of mutual trust already exists that Mashkoora uses to her advantage.

Without her even knowing it, Mashkoora is what the paradigm shift, that was witnessed at the UN International Conference on Population and Development, suggests: treat family planning as a matter of human rights rather than economic compulsion. -- Courtesy Dawn

Pakistan eyes $300 mln by selling Panda Bonds to Chinese investors

ISLAMABAD (APP): Federal Minister for Finance and Revenue, Muhammad Aurangzeb said Friday that he was keen to tap Chinese investors by selling as much as $300 million in Panda bonds for the first time ever this year.

In an interview with Bloomberg, the minister said, selling Yuan-denominated debt would allow Pakistan to diversify its funding sources and reach investors in a new market.

"We should have looked at quite frankly some time back," he said. China has the "second-largest and deepest bond market in the world" and it is the "right thing to do for the country" to tap the market, given Pakistan has already sold dollar and eurobonds, he said.

Aurangzeb said that initial Panda bond sale would be about $250 million to $300 million, which would be followed by further issuances.

The finance minister said that government's cash balances are strong enough and it's able to pay its debts on time.

The payments are unlikely to put pressure on the currency, and he expects the rupee to remain stable, he said.

"I don't really see a huge pressure on the rupee at this point in time," he said.

"As we go forward, I think it's going to remain range bound around these levels." The "wildcard" is oil prices, he added, which remain uncertain given the Red Sea attacks.

Pakistan's rupee is up 1.3% this year, according to local pricing compiled by Bloomberg, among the best-performing currencies in Asia.

According to Bloomberg report, Aurangzeb's most pressing challenge is negotiating new loans with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) to help bolster the country's reserves right after the current bailout program ends in April.

Bloomberg quoted IMF as having said earlier this week that Pakistan has expressed interest in a new medium-term program to improve its fiscal and external weaknesses and strengthen its economic recovery.

According to report, Aurangzeb said Pakistan will seek a new loan program from the IMF of at least three years. Further details will be discussed after the Washington-based lender's annual spring meetings, he said.

The nation of Pakistan is celebrating another momentous "Pakistan Resolution Day" which possesses an enormous commemoration in the historic struggle for acquiring Pakistan. The particular resolution is also renowned as "Lahore Resolution" made the Muslims of India to decide their own destiny and journey for the attainment of a separate entity to establish a Muslim State. That was the day when the Muslims of the sub-continent rejuvenated their political struggle for self-determination and acquisition of socio-political, economic, religious, and cultural freedom. On this particular day, the idea of a separate homeland for Muslims of India was converted clearly into the demand of Pakistan. Although presently, 23rd March day is losing its significance among our young generation. Most of our youth consider this day as just a public holiday, without realizing its true essence and spirit. But due to the emerging social chaos, and the political upheaval it is the need of the time that we should once again revitalize the spirit, struggle, and sufferings behind the freedom struggle.

Providing a short background, the British Raj, socio-political injustice, economic downfall, religious restraints, linguistic clash, cultural subjugation led to the Pakistan Resolution and ultimately to the creation of Pakistan. Furthermore, the provincial autonomy achieved in 1937, and the discriminatory congress rule further strengthened the Muslims' notion of a separate sovereign state. The 23rd March 1940 resolution was moved under the strong leadership of Quaid-i-Azam Mohammad Ali Jinnah also called the father of the Nation, who rate homeland where they could live their life according to the teachings of Islam. Pakistan is a precious gift that has given to us by Allah Almighty, it is the time to do some constructive efforts for our beloved country. Pakistan's armed forces are fully equipped and have the capacity to defend the territorial integrity and state sovereignty. Pakistan Navy is a strongly capable force having the potential to protect the sea borders and national maritime interests of Pakistan. With its unremitting vigilance and professional competence, Pakistan Navy has recently once again surprised the Indian Navy by detecting and blocking its submarine from entering into Pakistani waparedness, high morale, and exceptionally superior professional skills at sea. As Youth has always been a harbinger to a welcome change and given a proper direction, our youth can easily channelize the passion for their country. Ideally, 23rd March is the sort of day that should motivate people to seriously contemplate and reflect over our lives in a national sense rather than with the myopia of personal and individual evolution. Keeping in mind the countless sacrifices and sufferings of the men, women, children, old and young, certainly, it is not just another national day but it is the day to take a resolution at individual level to contribute positively in democratic structuring of Pakistan, give our

By Senator Samina Mumtaz Zehri

March 23 is the day of renewal of the covenant in which a resolution was passed for the establishment of a separate country for Muslims in the subcontinent. Through a peaceful struggle under the great leadership of Muhammad Ali Jinnah, the dream of Allama Muhammad Iqbal was realized on August 14, 1947. In these circumstances, it is imperative that the Pakistani nation realize the spirit of this revolutionary resolution and move beyond the traditional kind of renewal. Go out and work for the ideological and geographical completion of Pakistan according to this resolution. In order to make this Kingdom of God truly the Pakistan of Quaid-e-Azam and Iqbal, we have to show the same continuous and selfless sacrifice at the individual and collective level which was characteristic of the trained soldiers of freedom of Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah.

In this historic gathering on March 23, 1940, the Father of the Nation had made it clear that "the fact is that the mutual disagreement between the 'national concept of Islam and the social practices of the Hindu religion is a mere figment of India's imagination." To deny for a thousand years the civilizations of Hindus and Muslims have been intertwined and the two nations have been intertwined, but their differences are as strong as ever. It is totally wrong to expect that a revolution will take place in them and that Hindus and Muslims will become one nation only because of the imposition of a democratic constitution on them.

When the British government established in India for one and a half hundred years did not succeed in their work, how is it possible that the forcible establishment of federal system in the central government of India will achieve that success. Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah said that India's political problem was not about sects but about nations. Of course, this should be considered an international issue and a solution must be sought from that point of view. We need to acknowledge the veracity of this fundamental issue. As long as we do not accept it, the constitution we have drafted will fail and bring disaster. Islam and Hinduism are not just religions but in fact they are two different social systems. Therefore, this wish should be called a dream and dream that Hindus and Muslims will be able to create a common nation together." Pakistan came into being. When the British and the Hindus saw the seal of Pakistan being sealed, they by mutual alliance annexed several Muslim-majority districts of Punjab to India under the most unfair Red Cliff Award and also divided Bengal into Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah. Ensured the establishment of a divided Pakistan.

If we look at the back in history, it would be correct to say that in fact the Muslims of the subcontinent seen many ups and downs since the demise of these beloved leaders of the Pakistani nation. Especially after 9/11, Pakistan paid a heavy price for being a Muslim country.

The western world has laid the burden of uncom-

were facing a multifaceted decline after the failure of the War of Independence in 1857. During this time, the Muslim leaders made several attempts to put a stop to this decline and to organize the scattered Muslims, but they did not achieve the desired results until the day of reached March 23, 1940. On this day, thanks to the passage of the Lahore Resolution, the Muslim nation was revived under the oppression of the British government and the prejudice of the Hindu majority. He became aware of his right to self-determination and determined the direction and destination of his struggle for independence. The aim of this great struggle is to establish a modern Islamic, democratic and welfare state in which the religion of Islam is a stronghold. By establishing the political, economic and social system of Islam on the golden principles of Islam, it can be proved to the nations of the world that these golden principles are as applicable today as the Holy Prophet Muhammad Mustafa (peace be upon him). He was in the blessed time of Allah and his Companions and the Righteous Caliphs. However, shortly after the establishment of Pakistan, the father of the nation Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah passed away and a few years later, his right-hand man Quaid-e-Millat Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan was also martyred. The country has contribute to the development of the country. We need unity, we need justice, we need the rule of law and the constitution. We need to stand with Pakistani armed and security forces for national security and safety.

On March 23, 1940, people of different languages, of different faiths, of different statuses, of different races, of different castes were transformed into one united nation. It is very hard to say that today, despite being citizens of one country, we are divided into regions, we love our community, our city, we love our language more than our national language, we love our private business more than state institutions. Today we need the same enthusiasm, the same unity of 1940. At that time only Hindus were our enemy. Today all enemies of Islam are united against Pakistan. We can fight the enemies only by adopting the idea of unity, justice and love with motherland. We need to be tolerant and tolerant internally while being cruel to our enemies. We have sacrificed more than 80,000 precious lives over the last few years against terrorism to bring lasting peace to the country. In order to maintain this peace, to ensure the security of this country, we have to face internal enemies as well as external ones. The only way to confront the enemies of Islam and Pakistan is through unity. We must realize that the more divided we are, the more difficult the journey of development will be. In these circumstances, there is a need for the Pakistani nation to realize the spirit of that revolutionary resolution and to move beyond the traditional kind of renewal and work for the ideological and geographical fulfillment of Pakistan in accordance with this resolution. In order to make this God-given kingdom truly the Pakistan of Quaid-e-Azam and Iqbal, we must demonstrate at the individual and collective level the same constant sacrifice and self-sacrifice that Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah and his companions those fought for an independent country for Muslims. It was the specialty of the old, women, children and youth who got a separate country for the Muslims of the subcontinent by sacrificing millions of lives on the voice.

Thank you Jinnah

As Pakistan prepares to celebrate the 82nd anniversary of Lahore Resolution, it is vital to shed light on the event that changed the course of history in the subcontinent. As "Magna Carta" laid the foundation stone of people's power in Great Britain, the pledge made on 23rd March 1940 at the erstwhile Minto Park, for decades, serves as a cornerstone for Pakistan's socio-political culture. The Nation must utilize this moment to revisit the ideology and thought behind the historic resolution. 23rd March, revives the essence of nationalism among common people of Pakistan. As we breathe in a free country today, tribute must be paid to the ones who sacrificed their present for us. On this historic day, the Nation must be reminded of Quaid's words that defined the purpose and meaning of Pakistan. This article reproduces the most relevant quotes of the presidential address of Quaid-i-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah at the Lahore session of All India Muslim League that carved out an independent homeland for the Muslims of South Asia. As the events highlighting bigotry and communalism unfold across the border, the Pakistani nation stands indebted to the vision and foresight of its founding fathers. The Quaid said, "You may remember that we appointed a committee of ladies at the Patna Session (1938). It is of very great importance to us, because I believe that it is of absolutely essential for us to give every opportunity to our women to participate in our struggle of life and death."

ment by inducting Pakistani women in various fields including medical, education and technical branches of the Tri-services. Pakistani women in uniform has contributed a lot in service to the country. The first ever Pakistani Female Engagement team in any United Nations (UN) mission around the world received UN medals for serving in the Peacekeeping Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo last year. A team of 15 Pakistani women officers, received major recognition for being the first all-female group from Pakistan to serve in a UN peacekeeping mission. This service abroad for peacekeeping missions brought an immense respect to Pakistan at the global level.

At the same occasion, the Quaid further stated that, "We want that the British Government should in fact and actually meet the demands of the Arabs in Palestine." Muhammad Ali Jinnah backed the plight of Palestinians eight decades ago. In his all-important address, he did not forget to show solidarity with Palestinian brethren. To date, Pakistan's stance on Palestine is unchanged. On many occasions, PM Khan advocated a Two-State solution according to the aspiration and wishes of the people of Palestine. Pakistan should continue its unequivocal diplomatic support to the cause and must attempt to mobilize Muslim Ummah to resolve the crisis which has brought enormous pain to the people of Palestine. Jinnah reiterated, "Musalmans are not a minority. The Musalmans are a nation by any definition. We find out that even according to the British map of India we occupy large parts of this country, where the Musalmans are in a majority." Citing the work of London Times and the letter of Lala Lajpat Rai to C.R. Das, Quaid stressed on the separate identity of Muslims of the Subcontinent. He validated the 'Two Nation Theory' and presented colonialism with a workable solution to maintain peace in the Subcontinent.

Jinnah was well aware of the fact that Pakistan's due to its peculiar geostrategic location and the hostile neighboring environment needs strong Armed Forces to protect its national interests. Among the Tri-Services, Pakistan Navy was thus designated as an instrument to defend the maritime frontiers and interests of Pakistan.

During wartimes, Pakistan Navy has always espoused high standards of professionalism and valour. In 1965 war, Operation "Dwarka" launched by Pakistan Navy caused irreparable damage to Indian Navy, vehemently destroyed the Indian Radar system. In addition, Pakistan Navy's submarine Ghazi moved its patrol to Bombay harbor to challenge enemy's ships namely INS Vikrant and INS Mysore to dock out and get destroyed. This psychological fear of Ghazi adversely affected the Indian Navy's operational maneuvers. Yet again in the 1971 war, sinking of Indian warship Kukri brought an immense wartime casualty by PNS Hangor, is the only incident after WWII wherein any conventional submarine sank a Warship. Furthermore, the detections of Indian Navy submarine, after Pulwama military standoff, by Pakistan Navy evidently portrays its effective employment strategy coupled with superior professional acumen.

Recent developments and reports of subjugation and ill treatment of Muslims coming out of India validate Muhammad Ali Jinnah's address at the Lahore Session of All India Muslim League. Quaid remarked, "Muslim India cannot accept any constitution which must necessarily result in a Hindu majority government. Hindus and Muslims brought together under a democratic system forced upon the minorities can only mean Hindu Raj." The prediction of our visionary founding father made eight decades ago stands relevant and applicable today. In post-1947 India, it was evident that Nehru's sugar-coated secular democracy was bound to collapse one day or another.

Today, from revocation of Article 370 and Citizenship Amendment Act to Ayodhya Verdict, each development embosses Jinnah's words. This is what a Hindu Raj forced upon Muslims looks like. As renowned Indian author Arundhati Roy said, "Modi had been coming since 1925." Nehru's deodorized democracy was destined to fall apart and Gandhi's India was doomed to become Godse's India.

Pakistan Day: A manifestation of Muslims' struggle for a separate homeland in subcontinent

By Fakhar Alam

Following the Independence War of 1857, the Muslims of subcontinent were subjected to an unending ordeal of discrimination, inequality and disparity after the colonial rulers had strengthened their grip over the united India.

The Muslims, who ruled over the united India for over 800 years, had faced great mental agony, sense of deprivation and dejection after they were pushed to the wall in terms of intellectual, political, economic and education decay. After failure of 1857 War of Independence, the Muslims of British India were given a new hope and direction by social reformer, Sir Syed Ahmed Khan, who instilled a new vigor into Muslims after an inspired teachings of the renowned religious leaders, Mojaddad Alf Sani and Shah Waliullah.

Brought about an intellectual revolution among Muslims through his educational, political and social reforms, Sir Syed Ahmad Khan had succeeded to nullify the malicious propaganda of the colonial rulers, hindus and pessimist forces during an era of ominous, cruelty and oppression. He founded All India Muhammadan Educational Conference (AIMEC) at Aligarh in 1886, which carried forward his vision regarding modern education, socioeconomic empowerment and political unity of Muslims to regain their past glory. The network of educational institutions and political unity organized under AIMEC had enabled millions of Muslims to compete with other communities including Hindus and Sikhs by providing a launching pad for Muslims to initiate a peaceful political and democratic struggle for a separate homeland where they could live with dignity and freedom.

Sir Syed's reforms had excelled Muslims in education, social, economic and political sciences, resultantly their voices have strongly been heard by the British rulers. The Muslims, under the flag of All India Muslim League (AIML) founded on December 30, 1906 at Dhaka, got united by giving new impetus to the independence movement. It witnessed further momentum after Quaid-i-Azam spearheaded independence movement after formally joining AIML in 1913 and outlining of an independent state for Muslims majority provinces in North West India by the great poet philosopher Dr. Allama

Muhammad Iqbal during historic Allahabad address in 1930.

Thus, Dr. Allama Iqbal became the first statesman to articulate about the two nation-theories that Muslims were a separate and distinct nation besides deserving political independence from other regions and communities of the united India. "Pakistan Movement passes through different phases and finally achieved its practical shape in 1933 during a high-level gathering in London where Chaudhry Rehmat Ali had presented the name of Pakistan," said Professor Dr Muhammad Younas Khan, Chairman, Pakistan Studies Department, Islamia College Peshawar University (ICP) while talking to APP.

Recalling Chaudhry Rehmat Ali's famous saying "Now or never or parish forever", he said ICP's two former students, Aslam Khattak and Inyatullah Khan of Charsadda along with others Muslims leaders had endorsed the name of Pakistan. "Pakistan's name and Allahabad address had set a clear direction to the Muslims to achieve a separate homeland in the subcontinent," he said. The great Quaid united millions of Muslims at Iqbal Park, Lahore where they unanimously passed the historic Pakistan's Resolution on March 23, 1940. Following adoption of the Pakistan Resolution, Quaid-i-Azam had reorganized AIML on modern lines and made repeated visits to all Muslims majority provinces including KP (earlier called NWFP) to mobilize masses for Pakistan.
