ISLAMABAD (APP): Pakistan and the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia (KSA) on Tuesday, while regretting the failure of the international community to ensure ceasefire in Gaza, demanded its immediate enforcement, opening of a humanitarian corridor and averting of famine that was leading to a catastrophe.

Addressing a joint presser along with Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Faisal bin Farhan Al Saud, Foreign Minister Ishaq Dar said that Pakistan was deeply concerned over the catastrophic situation in Gaza.

Both the brotherly countries shared the same feelings on Gaza, he said, the world conscience must wake up and enforce an immediate and unconditional ceasefire to ensure unimpeded humanitarian aid, he added.

More Palestinians should not be killed due to starvation, he said, demanding for a global probe into the crimes committed against humanity in Gaza.

Foreign Minister Dar said that different investigations had been carried out across the world over the war crimes against humanity so why it could not take place in Gaza.

CCC resolves to launch stern legal action against baseless propaganda about security forces

Baseless allegations on law enforcers part of larger design to drive wedge between people, security forces; Army vows providing support to govt for sustainable socioeconomic growth; Gen Munir directs commanders to pro-actively deny any space to terrorists; Top army forum condemns war crimes, genocide being perpetrated in Gaza.

RAWALPINDI (APP): The 264th Corps Commanders' Conference (CCC) presided over by Chief of Army Staff (COAS) General Syed Asim Munir at the General Headquarters on Tuesday took serious notice of the baseless propaganda against the law enforcement agencies (LEAs) and the security forces, and resolved to launch strict legal action against the perpetrators.

"The forum noted with concern the malicious propaganda campaign meant to demoralise the armed forces and underscored that unfounded and baseless allegations on law enforcement agencies and security forces have become a fashion and are part of the larger design to drive a wedge between the people and the Armed Forces of Pakistan. We will not allow such efforts to succeed and as per the law and Constitution, stern action will be ensured," an Inter Services Public Relations (ISPR) news release said.

The forum paid rich tribute to the supreme sacrifices of Shuhada (martyrs) including officers and men of the armed forces, law enforcement agencies and the citizens who have laid their lives for peace and stability in the country.

The COAS appreciated the untiring efforts of Pakistan Army and LEAs in successfully thwarting several terrorist attacks and neutralising key terrorist commanders during the ongoing counterterrorism operations.

He directed the commanders to pro-actively deny any space to the terrorists.

The Army Chief said, "The Armed Forces and LEAs of Pakistan, fully backed by the resilient nation, remain determined to permanently eliminate this menace from Pakistan, INSHA'ALLAH".

The forum condemned the heinous terrorist attack against Chinese nationals in Besham as well as the killing of innocent civilians in Balochistan.

Tough talks

No matter how painful, a larger, medium-term IMF bailout, with complementary financial support from 'friendly' countries, is imperative for Pakistan to address its balance-of-payments troubles.

However, the key to unlocking fresh IMF funds lies in convincing the lender that Pakistan is now ready to undertake real reforms. Seeking a bailout of $6bn-$8bn before the current fiscal year ends, Finance Minister Muhammad Aurangzeb is set to hold discussions with the Fund for new lending on the margins of the IMF and World Bank spring meetings in Washington, as well as muster the support of 'friendly' nations for its request.

Negotiations for the new loan will not be easy even though the Fund is, according to the minister, "very receptive" to Pakistan's request for a new programme. Indeed, it has expressed its willingness to help Islamabad navigate through its crisis ever since Pakistani authorities broached the subject of a follow-up programme with its mission last month during the final review of the just-concluded $3bn Stand-by Arrangement. Yet it has made it clear that the new bailout hinges on Pakistan's readiness to implement tough, unpopular reforms the country had earlier circumvented. More recently, IMF chief Kristalina Georgieva said that Pakistan was in discussions with the Fund for a follow-up programme to the previous SBA, but added that "important issues" needed to be solved, including "the tax base, how the richer part of society contributes to the economy, the way public spending is being directed and ... creating ... a more transparent environment".

Mr Aurangzeb is discussing a new programme at a time when global creditors like the Asian Development Bank are repeatedly warning that Pakistan will continue to face challenges from substantial new external financing requirements and the rollover of old debt, exacerbated by difficult global financial conditions. Pakistan's desperation to close a new deal with the IMF is reflective of the perilous state of its economy. In its April 2024 Asian Development Outlook report, the ADB describes Pakistan's economic prospects as uncertain, with high risks on account of the impact of political uncertainty on the sustainability of stabilisation and reform efforts. Noting that potential supply chain disruptions from the escalation of the Middle East war would weigh on the economy, it says: "With Pakistan's large external financing requirements and weak external buffers, disbursement from multilateral and bilateral partners remains crucial." It points out that the IMF support for the reform agenda would improve market sentiment and catalyse affordable external financing from other sources, but warns that "these inflows could be hampered by lapses in policy implementation". If anything, the report suggests that Pakistan has no time to waste and no room to avoid the long-delayed reforms without causing irreparable harm to its people and economy.

Pakistan eyes clean energy with electrocatalytic water splitting

By Dr. M. Sagir
Pakistan struggles with frequent power outages and load shedding due to insufficient generation capacity, transmission losses, and distribution inefficiencies. The country heavily depends on imported fossil fuels, such as oil and gas, for power generation, which exposes it to price volatility and geopolitical tensions. The production and distribution of energy in Pakistan are costly, leading to affordability issues for consumers and hindering industrial competitiveness. Many rural and remote areas lack access to reliable electricity, hampering socio-economic development and quality of life.

These challenges could be addressed by integrating new sources of energy into Pakistan's energy mix. Pakistan has significant untapped renewable energy potential, particularly in solar, wind, and hydroelectric power. Investing in these clean energy sources can diversify the energy mix, reduce reliance on imported fossil fuels, and mitigate the impact of energy shortages. Enhancing transmission and distribution infrastructure can help minimize energy losses and improve the reliability and efficiency of energy supply. This includes modernizing grid systems and investing in smart grid technologies to optimize energy distribution. Implementing energy efficiency measures in industries, buildings, and transportation can help reduce energy demand and lower overall energy costs. This includes adopting energy-efficient appliances, improving building insulation, and promoting public transportation and fuel-efficient vehicles. Building local capacity in renewable energy technologies through training programs and knowledge sharing can help accelerate the adoption of new energy sources. Additionally, fostering technology transfer and collaboration with international partners can facilitate the deployment of renewable energy solutions in Pakistan. No doubt, the correlation between energy supply and economic growth is undeniable; hence, addressing this issue is paramount for Pakistan's development trajectory.

To meet the projected growth targets, Pakistan aimed to significantly upscale its power production from 14,000 MW to 50,000 MW between 2009 and 2022. However, the heavy reliance on fossil fuels for energy generation, estimated to cost $12 billion USD in 2007-08 and projected to soar to $41 billion USD by 2022, poses multifaceted challenges. Beyond economic strain, the unchecked utilization of fossil fuels exacerbates global environmental crises, including greenhouse gas emissions, climate change, and environmental degradation, impacting Pakistan's vulnerable ecosystems and contributing to economic losses due to natural disasters.

In response to these challenges, the scientific community has rallied around the quest for sustainable and renewable energy solutions. One such breakthrough avenue is electrocatalytic water splitting, a cutting-edge process poised to revolutionize renewable energy technologies. By leveraging catalysts composed of transition metals, metal oxides, or carbon-based compounds, electrocatalytic water splitting accelerates reaction kinetics, facilitating water electrolysis with enhanced efficiency and reduced energy thresholds. The allure of electrocatalytic water splitting lies not only in its capacity to generate hydrogen as a clean and sustainable energy source but also in its versatility across various sectors. Hydrogen, often hailed as the "fuel of the future," offers a clean combustion alternative to fossil fuels, emitting only water as a byproduct. Despite its potential, the economic production of hydrogen remains a formidable challenge. Electrolysis of water emerges as a viable solution, offering efficient and environmentally benign hydrogen generation. Moreover, electrocatalytic water splitting holds promise for grid stability and energy storage integration with renewable sources like wind and solar power. By converting excess electricity during periods of low demand into hydrogen via water electrolysis, surplus energy can be stored and deployed during peak demand, bolstering grid resilience and reliability.

Beyond energy production, electrocatalytic water splitting presents opportunities for resource conservation and environmental remediation. By harnessing renewable energy to drive water electrolysis, this technique diminishes reliance on finite fossil fuel reserves and fosters the synthesis of hydrogen from abundant water sources. Additionally, the oxygen byproduct finds applications in wastewater treatment, industrial processes, and medical treatments, contributing to cleaner air and water.

To unlock clean energy from electrocatalytic water splitting, Pakistan needs a multi-pronged approach. Researchers must develop efficient and affordable electrocatalysts, likely from abundant materials, while engineers design scalable and durable electrolyzers. Pairing these advancements with renewable energy sources like solar or wind is crucial. Additionally, integrating hydrogen production into the power grid and bringing down overall costs through strategic policies and economic incentives are essential. Collaboration between researchers, industry, and policymakers, along with public education on the benefits of clean hydrogen, can propel Pakistan towards a commercially viable electrocatalytic water splitting future.

However, hurdles remain on the path to widespread adoption of electrocatalytic water splitting, including the development of cost-effective catalysts, integration with renewable energy mechanisms, and scaling production to meet industrial demands. Collaboration among researchers, policymakers, and industry stakeholders is imperative to surmount these challenges and propel this transformative technology towards commercial viability. The pursuit of innovative solutions, such as electrocatalytic water splitting, holds promise for revolutionizing renewable energy technologies. This cutting-edge process not only offers clean hydrogen generation but also presents opportunities for grid stability, energy storage, resource conservation, and environmental remediation. However, overcoming challenges related to cost, scalability, and integration requires concerted efforts from the scientific community, policymakers, and industry stakeholders. By embracing such advancements and fostering collaboration, Pakistan can chart a sustainable and resilient path towards energy security and economic prosperity.

Change his name if BJP wins

wading into major headwinds.

On the other hand, the survey finds Mr Modi ahead of the main opposition Congress and its INDIA alliance partners. It offers no assurance that the adverse equation for the opposition may change during the long hard trudge ahead. Also, there's no discernible hint about a likely voter response to the possibility of a last-minute divisive strike that the Modi campaign is well known for. Mr Modi won the 2014 elections riding communal polarisation triggered by his party's anti-Muslim campaign in Muzaffarnagar in voter-rich Uttar Pradesh. He won in 2019 by staging a military stand-off with Pakistan.

The grand Ram temple in Ayodhya, as one has said earlier, had failed to become a national issue, be it for the Hindu electorate or any other. In a way, this represents a damning miscalculation for the Modi campaign given that the prime minister invested his prestige in the saturated TV coverage of the event beamed to cities and villages. Images of the prime minister in the role of a Hindu high priest failing to strike a chord in these elections is just one more worry for the ruling party.

The pre-poll survey shows little to nothing that favours the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) even as it still sees that he remains ahead of rivals albeit subject to 'ifs' and 'buts'.

Unemployment and price rise are the key concerns of nearly half the electorate, the Lokniti-CSDS survey shows. Nearly two-thirds of those surveyed (62 per cent), with the highest among cities (65pc), said getting jobs had become more difficult. A significant section, 55pc — way higher than the 40pc of those surveyed in 2019 — said corruption had increased, with only 19pc saying that it had decreased (a fall from 37pc who felt so in 2019).

Ram temple and religious issues figure way down in single digits in the order of importance to the voters. Two responses are evident to the state of play, one coming from Mr Modi, the other captured by the opposition's Kanhaiya Kumar, a Congress candidate in Delhi supported by the capital's ruling Aam Aadmi Party. Mr Modi has kept the divisive option warm. Not ready to respond to the questions on jobs and corruption, he has found references with communal slant more appealing. It seems that Congress leader Rahul Gandhi rustled up a muton meal with Bihar's opposition legend Lalu Yadav a few weeks ago. More recently, Lalu's son and former Bihar deputy chief minister Tejashwi Yadav posted a video of himself eating fish in a helicopter. Mr Modi has signalled these events as taunting his Hindutva supporters and as appeasement of Muslims. However, the claim seems to have drawn a yawn, even outright scorn as seen from a section of train commuters interviewed by NewsLaundry portal.

That the relatively tepid communal comment

may be testing the waters for a more vitriolic polarisation is not lost on Mamata Banerjee. The combative woman chief minister of West Bengal has cautioned her cadre to not fall into the BJP's trap by responding to communal needling with violence. West Bengal sends 42 MPs of whom the BJP took 18 last time, four less than 22 won by Ms Banerjee. She says she expects to win "twice the number of seats of the BJP" this time, which means a substantially reduced number for her main rival in West Bengal. If a communal assault does come its likely target would be West Bengal or Assam.

While Mr Modi has preferred to skirt the issues of unemployment and corruption, Kanhaiya Kumar, the former communist student leader from JNU, has kept his focus on jobs and electoral bonds, and on India's troubled secular spine. In a way, it's a summation of the opposition's stance. Kumar is one of three candidates the Congress is fielding in Delhi, the other four going to the Aam

Aadmi Party in a robust alliance that has worried the BJP. It's partly to breach this Congress-AAP alliance that the Modi government is accused of using its agencies to jail Chief Minister Arvind Kejriwal and his senior colleagues. But that may have boosted the alliance, which will find an even greater echo in Punjab, Goa and, importantly, also in the prime minister's home state of Gujarat.

Kanhaiya is a candidate from north Delhi, which witnessed large-scale anti-Muslim violence in 2020 evidently orchestrated to disrupt a nationwide campaign against controversial citizenship laws. Abutting Uttar Pradesh, Kanhaiya hopes to heal the constituency's experience that saw support against Muslims from various caste groups in the neighbouring state. Nine seats going to polls in the first phase come from western Uttar Pradesh, a heartland of Jat farmers, Rajput powerbrokers and a clutch of other influential castes that are said to have replaced their blanket support to Modi with a grudging one.

Early exits

Dr Niaz Murtaza

As the fractious new government fails to get a grip on matters, many already see its early demise, just a month after it was imposed via allegedly rigged polls. Early ends for civilian regimes and long innings for non-civilian ones is our norm, more so for rigged regimes/assemblies.

Four out of five largely legitimate Houses (1946, 1970, 1988, 2008 and 2013) completed their term though none of their seven prime ministers did so. But six out of eight rigged parliamentary-era assemblies and the nine prime ministers from them fell early and so did the four prime ministers from the two Houses completing their term (2002 and 2018). The reasons for early removals (except in 1977 when Bhutto called early polls and in 2012 when chief justice Iftikhar Chaudhry axed Yousuf Raza Gilani) were fallouts with the establishment. If the current dispensation falls early, it would not be unusual.

Past early exits varied much in their exact form (removal of just the prime minister, the ruling party or the Assembly itself) and modalities (martial law, no-trust vote, presidential dismissals or resignation under duress). So did the reasons for the fallout, ranging from minor policy or personality clashes to attempts by civilian prime ministers to clip the establishment's wings. Those axed on policy clashes often returned quickly, for example, the PPP and PML-N in the 1990s. Those daring to dream about clipping halloved wings had very ugly fallouts and were banished for long.

Bhutto was hanged

and his daughter came to power only briefly after more than a decade. Nawaz Sharif in 1999 was banished for several years. The MQM's Altaf Hussain, though not a national leader, had an ugly fallout in 2016. Imran Khan's fallout was perhaps the ugliest. Thus, a deeper analysis is needed to analyse the likely longevity of this wobbly, sorry-looking current set-up and the likely shape of an early end. We may even see a break from the past where both the prime minister and Assembly complete term or fall without an establishment hand in their collapse.

One unlikely way to this last option could be if election tribunals magically resolve the Form 45 saga in the PTI's favour. But the PML-N coalition's ranks have been contrived to reach a two-thirds majority and the number of election petitions filed by the PTI may be insufficient to reduce it to a minority. Street agitation may be a second way, especially if legal options to keep Imran Khan in jail run out, given the weak verdicts against him, and if a new judicial independence streak emerges in wake of the letter by six Islamabad High Court judges. This would put us in uncharted territory where a party having experienced an ugly fallout returns to power quickly against the establishment's wishes. Finally, the PPP and PTI may attempt to strike an alliance. But neither may want to be the junior partner. The PTI may not even want the PPP as junior partner and the PPP may not risk doing so without the approval of non-political elements.

Would this make an establishment-led early removal of the government the likeliest scenario? Given the PML-N's earlier fallouts, it cannot be ruled out. The potential for policy clashes is vast even with a pliant Shehbaz Sharif as prime minister. He has few powers as persons widely perceived to be pro-establishment are running key ministries and Nawaz Sharif's loyalists like Ishaq Dar run other important areas and his daughter runs Punjab. Thus, policy clashes between Nawaz Sharif and those seen as establishment protégés are the biggest Achilles heel of this regime.

The establishment had policy clashes with the PTI, but still waited over three years before allowing an in-house change. Earlier, prime ministers and even assemblies were removed even before two years. Easy ways to implement the removal and put in place an acceptable alternative set-up were present.

While easy options to replace the prime minister from within the PML-N may not be possible, non-political circles may look to other options.

The binding constraint would be finding an alternative set-up which is more pliant and competent. The PTI would be neither and PPP not the latter. This may force the establishment to tag along with the PML-N despite policy clashes. The PML-N's hands are tied too given its contrived win.

Thus, the fear of Imran Khan's return may force some give and take. Also, the PML-N is too weak to try to clip halloved wings. Perhaps an uneasy cohabitation may persist for at least two to three years until one side is strong enough to jettison the other.

Mohammad Ali Babakhal

Finland has been ranked as the world's happiest country for the seventh straight year. It is also the 13th safest in the world. In the Global Terrorism Index, it is ranked 89th, placing it at the bottom of the list. Yet, even though it is one of the safest countries, preventing violent extremism (VE) is one of Finland's top priorities.

Finland's first National Action Plan (NAP) to prevent VE was drafted in 2012, the second version in 2016. Its implementation was assessed by an external reviewer, and the assessment report published in 2019. The objectives of the plan were to reduce extremist violence and its threat, promote the implementation of equality, freedom of speech, and other constitutional rights, and detect and investigate hate crimes.

The Finnish interior ministry now coordinates the prevention of VE and leads the National Cooperation Network, while the Finnish Security and Intelligence Service works with the police and international partners to combat terrorism. The Finnish plan also recognises the power of politicians in determining a direction for society and in defining values that influence public opinion and attitudes about VE.

Considering the productive role religious communities can play in the prevention of VE, the plan gave them immense importance. It aimed to strengthen the knowledge of imams and community leaders so that they could support their communities with the correct information. Militant groups attempt to use local incidents to support their ideology and spread their own interpretations of religion through social media. Finnish authorities realised that religious leaders can prove effective in countering militant ideology if they can strengthen the immunity of their communities against messages that encourage violence.

The plan also recognised that families are in the strongest position to prevent radicalisation. Strong emotional ties within families can play an important role in preventing a person from joining militants. Likewise, the Finnish saw that their municipalities can also play an effective role. In multi-professional "anchor work", the police, social workers, psychiatric nurses, and education officers were asked to work with young people. "Anchor work" also acted as a contact point for anyone if they had concerns about radicalised individuals.

The plan also recognised that young people can help prevent VE and build peace. They can support other young people and apply their experiences and expertise to preventive work. During the last few years, the focus in Finland has been on improving the media literacy of young people, while less attention has been paid to that of adults. Increasing knowledge and the ability to identify the concepts used by extremists is essential, so training materials are being prepared for the public.

Hate speech is linked to violent extremism, as it divides people into "us" and "them" — friends and enemies — thus strengthening the possibility of confrontation. The Finnish plan aimed to increase the understanding of its public and professionals about communications related to hate speech and strengthen the ability of people working with young citizens to talk about propaganda and hate speech, as well as support the victims of hate speech.

The gender perspective in the prevention of VE is often overlooked. Militant groups have both male and female members. Mothers play a more important role in raising children and are faced with the difficult task of protecting children in conflict areas from the influence of violent groups. Women, as mothers, can play an important role in saving children from being re-converted by militants. The plan focused on increasing knowledge and awareness of the ways in which VE affects women in Finland and what can be done to support them.

Combating violent radicalisation in prisons was a key objective of the Finnish plan, as many of the individuals who had committed terrorist attacks in Europe became radicalised during imprisonment. Before release from prison, the release plan now covers housing, education, job opportunities, and family situations. Information about released prisoners is exchanged with the intelligence service, police department, social services, and municipality so that the released persons may be assessed and monitored.

Since the education sector plays an important role in supporting the well-being, development, and learning of children, enhancing teachers' knowledge of extremist ideologies was part of the prevention measures identified.

From Finland's experience, militancy-infested societies can learn that the kinetic option can kill terrorists, but extremism may still multiply. It is, therefore, not enough to simply counter terrorism: we must work actively to prevent it.
