Hasty transition

Out of nowhere, the government has launched a new cybercrime authority: the National Cyber Crimes Investigation Agency. This move to replace the FIA's cybercrime wing raises substantial concerns about the motive behind it.

The NCCIA is mandated to handle offences under the Prevention of Electronic Crimes Act, which, activists allege, was used routinely by the FIA to silence dissent. Of course, conversely, bad actors use social media to spread disinformation and misinformation, necessitating oversight.

But at a time when digital rights and privacy remain key issues for the state to address, the authorities have opted to forgo any meaningful dialogue with digital rights groups, the IT sector, or even the public. Such an opaque approach fosters distrust and scepticism towards the government's intentions. It has neither presented a clear rationale nor demonstrated the deficiencies within the existing framework that necessitated this move.

The reuse of the FIA's resources — personnel, assets, and existing cases — under a new banner raises a fundamental question: what exactly is the objective of the NCCIA that the FIA could not achieve? If the goal was to enhance capabilities or streamline operations, would it not have been more prudent to bolster the existing framework rather than dismantle it? The abruptness of the move suggests the new rulers are not behind it.

The move will likely create redundancies and confusion, diluting the focus from actual cybercrime threats to the procedural chaos of transitioning to a new agency. Also, such disruptions could hinder ongoing operations and complicate international cooperation under links nurtured by the FIA.

Furthermore, the NCCIA, with its broad and unclear mandate, could potentially lead to increased surveillance and data collection practices, encroaching upon the personal liberties of citizens under the guise of security.

It appears the PML-N government is working in the same manner as when Peca was being promulgated, when no input was taken. The situation has called into question the regulatory environment for the internet in the coming years. Ostensibly, the aim is to exert greater control over social media and to gain more power to crack down on activists, dissidents and journalists critical of state policies.

The government owes the public an explanation of the necessity and aims of the NCCIA. It must articulate how this new set-up will better serve the cybersecurity needs of the nation without compromising democratic freedoms.

It is also crucial that further developments in this area involve a broad spectrum of stakeholders. Engaging with experts in digital rights, cybersecurity, the legal domain, and the public is essential to ensure that the agency's operations are balanced, effective, and respectful of the rights it is purportedly designed to protect. The urge to police social media must be resisted.

Inconsistent ties

Aizaz Ahmad Chaudhry

After withdrawing its troops from Afghanistan in August 2021, the US appears to have downsized its relations with Pakistan. President Joe Biden did not make any contact with Pakistan's leadership for the first three years of his presidency. It is only in March this year that Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif received an unsigned letter from him underscoring the "enduring partnership" between the two nations and identifying areas where they could work together. Biden's letter was generally welcomed in Pakistan because of the country's policy to maintain mutually beneficial ties with all major powers, including the US with which it has had sustained periods of close cooperation.

However, the letter has not fundamentally altered the tenor of the bilateral relationship, though some official contacts have started. The acting undersecretary for political affairs visited Islamabad recently for talks on bilateral ties, including regional security issues. Our prime minister sent a short reply to Biden's letter, and the current US ambassador to Pakistan seems inclined to enhance bilateral ties. There could be five plausible reasons for America's current disenchantment with Pakistan. First, political instability, the continuing economic crisis, and the worsening law and order situation have lowered Pakistan's relevance for the outside world, including the US. Second, after withdrawing its troops from Afghanistan, the US lost interest in that country and Pakistan, though the resurgence of terrorist entities in Afghanistan, is becoming a growing international concern. Third, the US is now focused on its rivalry with China, for which it has chosen India as its strategic partner. Fourth, the US seems to have concluded that Pakistan is in the Chinese camp even though Pakistan has consistently signalled its desire for strategic autonomy. Fifth, the allegation that the US had played a role in the April 2022 regime change persists, even though Donald Lu in his recent testimony before the Congressional subcommittee has denied it.

This is not the first time that Pakistan and the US have been estranged. In fact, during the past seven decades, their relationship has oscillated between warm engagement and cold estrangement. When Pakistan started its life as an independent state in 1947, it had to build its statecraft from scratch, with the then Indian leaders determined to undo Pakistan. The US at that time appeared as the preferred source for much-needed economic and military assistance. Experts from the US facilitated the green revolution and rapid industrial development. Pakistan soon became a role model for other developing countries. Pakistanis thought that they had found in the US an enduring partner.

But this assessment turned out to be incorrect. The bonhomie ended with the 1965 India-Pakistan war, when the US imposed sanctions on Pakistan. Later in 1971, the expectation that America's seventh fleet would help Pakistan was dashed. The two countries moved away from each other only to come closer a decade later when Soviet forces entered Afghanistan. Pakistan teamed up with the US and helped create nurseries for the Afghan jihad. However, as soon as the Soviets left Afghanistan, America imposed sanctions on Pakistan under the Pressler Amendment.

The events of 9/11 once again brought the two closer, this time to fight a global war on terror. However, as the war in Afghanistan lingered on, a frustrated US decided to pull out its troops, partly holding Pakistan responsible because of its support for the Afghan Taliban. Ever since, the two countries have been drifting away from each other. A debate is on-going in Pakistan as to why US-Pakistan ties resemble a roller-coaster ride and whether America is a reliable friend. The answer lies in a mismatch of expectations. For Pakistanis, a friend in need is a friend indeed. However, for the US, as indeed for most powers, inter-state relationship is a function of the convergence of mutual interests.

An important question weighing on the minds of Pakistan's leadership concerns how to find the right balance in our ties with the US and China, which are locked in an intensifying strategic competition. China is a great friend which has made significant investments in Pakistan, including CPEC. It has never embarrassed us or intervened in our internal affairs, and always supported us at international forums. The US is our largest trading partner, a long-standing source of investments, a favourite destination of Pakistani students and physicians, important to our IT community, and a military partner in the fight against terrorism.

That the government of Pakistan has decided to maintain relations with both the US and China predicated on our own national interests seems to be the right course of action. -- Courtesy Dawn

An opportunity being lost

Ghazi Salahuddin

Being a man of action in the lazy setting of Pakistan's politics, Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif would know that every challenge is an opportunity. The bigger the challenge, the bigger the opportunity. And the task he has at hand now is truly monumental. So, what does his response look like?

Before I come to that, let me dwell a bit on this theory of challenge and response that was defined by English historian Arnold Toynbee. This hypothesis by a philosopher of history explains why and how civilizations throughout history have grown and vanished.

Toynbee concluded that, in the words of a text I have, civilizations "prosper by meeting challenges head-on with the help of innovative minorities led by exceptional leaders". We are told that "civilizations began to fail when their leaders ceased to respond creatively to challenges".

There is little doubt that Pakistan is presently in bad shape. There seems no way out of our present difficulties. I am tempted to quote Thomas Paine: "These are times that try men's souls; the summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country; but he that stands it now deserves the love and thanks of man and woman".

If these are sublime thoughts, let me climb down to the level of the ridiculous. On Sunday last, on a holiday when all government offices are closed, the Cabinet Division issued a notification to announce the appointment of Foreign Minister Ishaq Dar as the deputy prime minister "with immediate effect and until further orders". The appointment, of course, was made by Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif, who has to deal with many great challenges.

During this week, Ishaq Dar's elevation has been widely discussed in the media. In countless conversations across the country, in drawing rooms and on coffee tables and street corners, people may have wondered about this move. It seemed something not so much for the serious political commentators as for the comedy shows and the cartoons.

Since this subject is already dated for this column, I'll let it go. But that initial thought about the grim challenge that the prime minister has to respond to is important for the nation. Is it at all doable? Is the goal within the reach of Shehbaz Sharif or any other leader in this country? Is there a prescription somewhere to guide the leader of a country like Pakistan?

Moving ahead is something. Our story is that of lagging behind. In recent decades, our ranking in South Asia, across almost all social indicators, has gone down. These are societies very much like ours. This means that we have lessons to learn. On the face of it, it should be easy for us to follow in the footsteps of some specific countries.

Ah, but every unhappy country is unhappy in its own ways. Pakistan has its unique problems. What is not unique is the leadership it has — and I am not alluding here to the man who is in office at present. Those who pretend to know the solutions have never been in short supply. Yet, the country appears to be wandering in the wilderness.

When I suggest that the present arrangement is not delivering, the point is that no radical moves have been made to create momentum for change. No revolutionary steps are in evidence to turn the tide of events. By and large, the impression is that this is business as usual. Sadly, this will not work. It does not work in revolutionary times.

Are these revolutionary times? An answer to this question would require a solemn investigation by social scientists and thinkers. We are aware of the attention that the present rulers are devoting to economic revival. This is necessary but economists and financial experts cannot set a country's ideological, intellectual and moral sense of direction.

Incidentally, I was in Lahore to participate in the 5th Asma Jahangir Conference when the news of Ishaq Dar's additional appointment was made public, allowing us a little diversion in the midst of some very thoughtful and engaging discussions. The entire weekend pulsated with excitement with the presence of so many renowned national and international observers of current affairs and defenders of human rights.

Ever since her untimely death in February 2018, this country has desperately been in need of the wisdom and courage that Asma Jahangir possessed. She was an exceptional human being and her struggle for human rights is an inspiring chapter in our history.

One measure of Asma Jahangir's stature in the global narrative of democracy and human rights was the quality of participation and discourse in this conference on the theme: "People's Mandate: Safeguarding Civil Rights in South Asia". In terms of how it was conceived and designed, the conference was a very insightful compendium of analyses and elucidations of an entire range of national issues. It is not possible for me to sum up the proceedings of the conference. The idea is to see it against the backdrop of what is happening in Pakistan and what options do our policymakers and rulers have to set things right. In other words, here was something for those in power to seriously look into and interact with in an intellectual context.

Escalating Tobacco Tax by 37% proposed by SPDC & WHO to save lives, boost revenue

ISLAMABAD (INP): An increase of 37% in Federal Excise Duty (FED) on tobacco products has been proposed by the Social Policy Development Centre (SPDC) to reinforce the gains already achieved and to advance further in enhancing public health outcomes and revenue collection.

"Pakistan can save as many as 265,000 lives, generate an additional revenue of Rs 37.7 billion and push 757,000 people to quit smoking through increasing the FED by 37 percent," said the SPDC policy paper name "Recovering Healthcare Costs and Saving Lives" that aligns recommendation of World Health Organization (WHO) and Campaign for Tobacco Free Kids (CTFK).

The SPDC proposal comes when the government prepares to outline its budgetary agenda, in a bid to prioritize public health and economic prosperity through targeted tobacco tax reforms. Pakistan has a two-tiered system of FED on cigarettes. The country made significant strides and increased the FED on cigarettes in 2022-23 with a substantial increase in FED. The current FED share in retail prices is 48 percent and 68 percent respectively for low and high tiers. The SPDC has warned of negative effect on both the revenue and public health efforts if the rates (FED) were not increased and trend was not maintained. Therefore, it advocated to further adjust the FED in line with international standards, to take the tax share of retail prices towards 70 percent.

The proposal seeks to take the FED share to 54 percent or Rs 154 and 72.1 percent or Rs 452 for economy and premium brands, respectively.

The proposal was backed by the gains of previous tax adjustments.

Russia accuses Nato of preparing for conflict

Monitoring Desk
MOSCOW: Nato's four-month-long military exercises near Russia's borders, known as Steadfast Defender, are proof the alliance is preparing for a potential conflict with Russia, a spokeswoman for Russia's Foreign Ministry said on Saturday.

The spokeswoman, Maria Zakharova, dismissed accusations by Nato this week that Russia is engaged in hybrid attacks on its member states, saying this was misleading "misinformation" aimed at distracting people from the alliance's activities. It was Nato that had waged a hybrid war with Russia by supporting Ukraine with arms, intelligence and finances, she said in a statement.

"Right now, Nato's largest exercise since the Cold War, Steadfast Defender, is taking place near Russia's borders. According to their scenario, coalition's actions against Russia are being practiced using all the instruments, including hybrid and conventional weapons," she said in a statement. "We have to admit that Nato is seriously preparing for a 'potential conflict' with us."

Relations between Russia and the West have been at their most hostile in decades following the start of Russia's military conflict in Ukraine in 2022.

GAZA STRIP: Talks resumed in Egypt on Saturday aimed at halting months of war in Gaza between Hamas and Israel that have triggered protests around the world.

Mediators from Qatar, Egypt and the United States sat down with a Hamas delegation to hear the group's response to a proposal that would halt fighting for 40 days and exchange hostages for Palestinian prisoners, according to details released by through May.

Russia said at the time the drills marked an "irrevocable return" of the alliance to Cold War schemes.

The Russian defence ministry said on Saturday its air defence forces shot down four US-produced long-range missiles over the Crimea peninsula, weapons known as Army Tactical Missile Systems (ATACMS) that Washington has shipped to Ukraine in recent weeks. The ministry said later that Russian aircraft and air defence systems had downed a total of 15 ATACMS in the past week.

On Tuesday, Russian officials said Ukraine had attacked Crimea with ATACMS in an attempt to pierce Russian air defences of the annexed peninsula but that six had been shot down.

Gaza needs biggest post-war reconstruction effort since WWII: UN

Monitoring Desk
GAZA STRIP: The United Nations said that the post-war reconstruction of Gaza would require an international effort unseen since the aftermath of World War II, estimating it could cost up to US$40 billion.

It came as Hamas chief Ismail Haniyeh struck an optimistic tone over a possible truce and hostage release deal for Gaza, after weeks of largely stalled negotiations. There have been reports of sticking points between the militant group and Israel nearly seven months into the war that has devastated the Palestinian territory. But Haniyeh, head of the militant group's Qatar-based political bureau, said in calls to Egyptian and Qatari mediators that Hamas was studying the latest proposal with a "positive spirit".

Much of Gaza has been reduced to a grey landscape of rubble and the United Nations estimated the cost of reconstruction at between US$30 billion and US$40 billion.

"The scale of the destruction is huge and unprecedented... this is a mission that the global community has not dealt with since World War II," UN assistant secretary-general Abdallah al-Dardari told a briefing in the Jordanian capital Amman. The UN official said "72 per cent of all residential buildings have been completely or partially destroyed". Reconstruction is made more difficult by the presence of large quantities of unexploded ordnance in the debris that Gaza's Civil Defence agency says triggers "more than 10 explosions every week".
