Pak urges US to forge balanced ties with S. Asian nations, not overly align with India

WASHINGTON (INP): The United States’ policy to over-align itself with India negates the country’s traditional policy of maintaining strategic balance in the relationship with South Asian countries, Pakistan Ambassador to the US, Masood Khan, has said, while underscoring that restoration of equilibrium would contribute to peace and security in the region.

At the same time, he said in a pod-cast with Tim Horgan of World Affairs Council of New Hampshire — a think-tank — that Pakistan and the US have now re-calibrated their relationship around two clusters — security and economic partnership. “When we talk about Pak-US economic partnership, which is all encompassing, we also include climate change and issues like healthcare, education, people-to-people contacts, so that we could give strong sinews to this relationship,” the ambassador said. On US-China relations, the Ambassador said that the United States leadership has been managing the relationship with “great care and wisdom.” He also noted that the recent visits have set the ground for a collaborative model, not a confrontational one. The ambassador expressed the view that rapprochement between United States and China would be in the interest of the two countries and the world. In this regard, he said that Pakistan could act as an economic bridge between China and the United States. While the US was decoupling or de-risking, Masood Khan said it could relocate some of its industries to Pakistan.

Pakistan, IMF disagree on key loan program points

ISLAMABAD (INP): Pakistan and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) are still grappling with several key issues as they negotiate the terms of a new loan program. According to sources within the Finance Ministry, disagreements persist on tax exemptions for former FATA (Federally Administered Tribal Areas) regions and the tax treatment of various income groups.

A major sticking point appears to be the continuation of tax breaks for Pakistan’s former FATA territories. While the IMF pushes for their immediate removal, the Finance Ministry argues that a one-year extension is crucial to support development efforts in the region. This includes tax breaks on imported machinery and income tax relief.

One area where progress has been made is income tax on exporters. Both sides have reportedly agreed to a revised system that calculates taxes based on exporters’ income and expenses, replacing the current flat rate of 1%. However, negotiations remain deadlocked regarding income tax rates for salaried and non-salaried individuals. Additionally, the IMF’s proposal to impose an 18% sales tax on the agriculture and health sectors faces resistance from Pakistan.

The Finance Ministry has signaled its openness to taxing pensions exceeding one lakh rupees per month. Meanwhile, discussions are ongoing regarding the creation of a national tax authority or council to streamline federal and provincial tax collection. The IMF has reportedly linked the loan program’s terms to Pakistan’s new budget and is unwilling to budge on Parliamentary approval of these conditions. This signifies a potentially difficult road ahead for the government, as implementing these measures could face public backlash.

The ongoing negotiations highlight the challenges Pakistan faces in securing vital IMF funds. Finding a middle ground between the IMF’s demands for fiscal consolidation and the government’s desire to minimize the impact on citizens will be crucial for reaching a successful agreement.

Enduring friendship

The optics from Shehbaz Sharif's China trip appear to be positive. The highlight of the visit came on Friday, when the prime minister met China's top brass, including President Xi Jinping and Premier Li Qiang.

In other engagements, Mr Sharif and his delegation, including top ministers, networked with Chinese investors and officials. The meeting with Mr Xi was warm, as China's leader extolled the virtues of the bilateral relationship, and promised to "build a closer China-Pakistan community".

As for concrete takeaways, there were pledges to revive CPEC, with Xi Jinping saying Beijing was willing to create an "upgraded version" of the corridor, while at least 32 MoUs were signed, covering various sectors such as transport, infrastructure, agriculture, etc.

While both the Pakistani and Chinese sides were effusive in their praise for the bilateral relationship, concerns regarding security were communicated by the highest echelons of the state. President Xi hoped that Pakistan would "effectively guarantee the safety of Chinese personnel", while Premier Li echoed similar concerns.

Such messaging was expected from Beijing, especially after five Chinese workers were killed in the Dasu terrorist attack earlier this year. For his part, Mr Sharif extended his condolences over the loss of life, and promised that Pakistan would do all it could to protect Chinese personnel and interests. Mr Sharif also promised Chinese investors in Shenzhen that the state had zero tolerance for corruption.

From the PM's interactions, it is clear that China will stand by Pakistan and is committed to deepening ties, but that Pakistan will have to deliver on promises of fool-proof security, and crack down on corruption. China is perhaps Pakistan's closest bilateral partner, along with Saudi Arabia, and maintaining this relationship is essential to the country's geo-economic and geopolitical interests. Attracting new Chinese investment, and launching the 'second phase' of CPEC, can play a key role in getting Pakistan out of the dire financial straits it finds itself in currently.

But it is clear that the state will have to work overtime to ensure that the new CPEC projects, as well as the multiple MoUs signed in Beijing, are translated into reality. It should be remembered that following his recent trips to Saudi Arabia and the UAE, the PM returned with pledges of billions of dollars in investments. Most of those pledges — if not all — have yet to materialise. Perhaps the issue is that whether it is our friends in the Gulf or our partners in China, Pakistan's foreign allies want to see internal political stability, a commitment to financial transparency and fiscal responsibility, as well as a secure environment free of terrorism before they commit their funds. This is perhaps the biggest obstacle that confronts the state in attracting foreign investment.

Modi's 'guarantee'

Aizaz Ahmad Chaudhry

That Modi would win his third term was never in doubt. However, contrary to expectations, he did not achieve the landslide he was hoping for. Why has 'Modi ki guarantee' (a boastful commitment to people's welfare) not delivered the two-thirds majority to which he aspired? Several reasons are being cited: high unemployment rates, rising inflation, and the incumbency factor. The opposition projected Modi as a fascist in the making. His intense anti-Muslim rhetoric scared away not only Muslim voters, whom he called 'ghusbathiy' or infiltrators, but also liberal Indians attached to India's secular and pluralistic ethos. Losing the seat housing the Ram Mandir in Ayodhya is a case in point.

Yet, with 240 seats, the BJP is the largest party in Lok Sabha, way ahead of the Indian National Congress, which secured 99 seats. With its coalition partners, the BJP is assured of a third consecutive term led by Modi. This has become possible because of several notable achievements, mostly in the economic field. Under his watch, India became the fifth largest economy, compared to the 10th when he took over the reins of power 10 years ago. GDP has grown by 162 per cent, average income by 135pc, and foreign exchange reserves by 113pc to $620 billion. There has been a surge in internet usage, while digital transactions have grown by 358pc to $95bn. A series of initiatives were launched to make India a manufacturing hub. Modi's government added 50,000 kilometres of national highways (a 60pc increase since 2014) and 31,000 km of rail networks, with plans to start bullet trains. Thirty million houses have been built for the poor.

With the economy doing well, India was able to spend more for its defence needs. According to the Stockholm-based organisation Sipri, India spent $83.6bn on its military in 2023, the steepest annual rise since 2009, and a 44pc increase since Modi took over in 2014. It is now the fourth largest military spender in the world. Notably, the bulk of the funds for military procurement (75pc) were allocated to domestically produced equipment, which has boosted local manufacturing, including that of homebuilt aircraft carrier, Vikrant. He also fast-tracked India's space programme, achieving the landing of Chandrayaan-3 on the moon in August 2023.

What does Modi's third term look like? Ostensibly, his top priority is to place India on course to become a developed country by 2047. He is also likely to continue his efforts to consolidate India's status as a 'Hindu first' nation, but it appears that this may not dilute his focus on the economy. He envisions that by 2030, India should be a $6.7 trillion economy, surpassing Japan and Germany to become the third-largest global economy. Even though India is the third-largest climate polluter, Modi wishes to make India climate-friendly by 2070. He also plans to move the country towards digital governance.

India's foreign policy under Modi's third term is likely to continue in the same mode: navigating a tough balance in its relations with mutually antagonistic major powers: the US (strategic partner), Russia (enduring friend), and China (competitor); while enhancing special affinities with the Gulf sheikhdoms. He is likely to continue projecting his country's image as a leader of the 'Global South'.

Modi has disconnected his country from Pakistan in every domain. During the election campaign, he was utterly hostile to Pakistan. The jingoistic rhetoric of Modi's companions was centred around the mindset of 'ghus ke mareng' (infiltrate and kill), which is dangerous for regional peace. Its talk of targeting Azad Kashmir and Gilgit-Baltistan is also empty rhetoric, as any misadventure is likely to receive a befitting response, as in February 2019. India's accusation of Pakistan committing cross-border terrorism is also not borne out by the facts. It is not India that is suffering from terrorism, but Pakistan, where Indian operatives have managed to kill 20 Pakistanis during 2023, similar to what they did in Canada and the US.

It appears that in his third term, Modi might not take any positive initiative towards Pakistan, even though he wants a stable western border to continue his focus on his economic vision and goals. Pakistan's government would be well advised to wait until a positive initiative is taken by the Modi government.

Should he change his mind and approach Pakistan for limited cooperation, Pakistan should respond positively. Meanwhile, it should focus all its energies inward to achieve a degree of political stability, continuity of economic policies, and human development in pursuit of a clear vision and positive strategy for the country. That is the only way Pakistan can regain its relevance in the eyes of friends and foes alike. -- Courtesy Dawn

Policing one's own

Muna Khan

What did you have for lunch last Sunday? What about 10 Sundays ago? Or 10 years ago? What thoughts run through your mind as you try to answer these questions? Memory is the ongoing process of information retention over time, according to Harvard, and a lot of research continues to go into understanding how memory works. Fear not, my piece isn't about cognitive science, but how our past actions, seemingly innocuous, can impact our present.

The British politician and academic Faiza Shaheen knows this well now. The former Labour candidate, who narrowly lost her constituency in 2019, learned last week that she'd been blocked by her party from contesting the election next month, reportedly over her tweets relating to Israel.

Earlier, she was asked by the party's national executive committee to explain her tweet history from as far back as 2014, when she was not a member of the Labour party. She was asked why she liked a tweet featuring a video skit by US talk show host Jon Stewart about not being able to freely talk about Israel and Palestine. As he begins to talk about the war on Gaza in that sketch, Stewart's colleagues on the show jump up and rebuke him for daring to question Israel's actions. It is a comedic but essentially accurate representation of how difficult it is to talk about Israel in the West without being shut down for being anti-Semitic — a trend that continues.

"Just merely mentioning Israel or questioning in any way the effectiveness or humanity of Israel's policy is not the same thing as being pro-Hamas," Stewart says in the skit before he is shut down by the same colleagues. (You'd be forgiven for thinking this commentary is from today.)

Fast forward to 2024, and Stewart is back hosting the comedy show once a week and being critical of the Zionist state. However, liking his politics on social media has pretty damning consequences. Shaheen doesn't even remember liking that tweet 10 years ago, but her detractors remember. She acknowledged that the tweet she liked references antisemitic tropes and apologised for it, but as we've seen well before the Oct 7 attacks, you can be forgiven everything but a hint of criticism of Israel.

Shaheen has since resigned from the Labour party and plans to run as an independent. She has been replaced by a pro-Israeli candidate who is not from the area. Shaheen's supporters are angry at the Labour party, which, in its defence, says they want the most suitable candidates. To be clear, Shaheen went through all the processes required and was cleared to run for the seat.

"They would rather lose than have a left-pro-Palestine candidate. This is offensive to my community," she tweeted.

Shaheen's politics reflect issues Labour once stood for: wealth inequality, public ownership, environmental issues, and Palestine. But under Keir Starmer's leadership, the party stands for something else. In fact, Starmer is accused of purging the party of left-wing candidates; coincidentally, all of them have one thing in common — they spoke in favour of an immediate ceasefire in Gaza.

Labour is widely expected to win next month's election, and is already behaving like Israel's newest best friend; a trusted one that can be counted on to do its bidding. I see its de-selection of Shaheen as one example of wanting to make its rich donors with ties to Israel happy. The manner in which political parties and other organisations like the media aid Israel in shutting down conversations by slapping the "antisemitic" label is horrifying. This is how meaningful conversations on Israel's treatment of Palestinians — grounded in truth — are blocked. All critics are silenced and vanished from screens.

Two examples this year include female journalists Saniga Myska of LBC radio and Belle Donati of Sky News, who were reportedly let go of shortly after difficult interviews with Isra-eli officials. Both women are respected journalists who were merely doing their jobs when they asked tough questions. Apparently you can't ask these sorts of questions of Isra-eli officials. How can voters and audiences be OK knowing foreign powers have that kind of hold on their media? This is deeply worrying for a free press.

The double standards are all too clear to see. Shaheen's social media activity is open to scrutiny, but Labour candidate Luke Akehurst's is not. He's a staunch supporter of Israel, has called the UN antisemitic, and said Palestinians actors "staged atrocities in Gaza" in his tweets. He isn't policed for his views.

I'm hopeful that Shaheen stands a chance next month, because she has a strong supporter base which, I believe, has grown in the last week out of anger at Labour's policies rooted in racism and Islamophobia. Shaheen's courage should inspire young women here, too. -- Courtesy Dawn

Gaza's Health Ministry says 274 Palestinians were killed in Israeli raid that rescued 4 hostages

Monitoring Desk
DEIR AL-BALAH: At least 274 Palestinians including dozens of children were killed, and hundreds more were wounded, in the Israeli raid that rescued four hostages held by Hamas, Gaza's Health Ministry said Sunday. The military said its forces came under heavy fire during the complex daytime operation deep inside the territory.

The killing of so many Palestinians, in a raid that Israelis celebrated as a stunning success because all four hostages were rescued alive, showed the heavy cost of such operations on top of the already soaring toll of the 8-month-long war ignited by Hamas' Oct. 7 attack.

The operation deep into Nuseirat, a built-up refugee camp in central Gaza dating back to the 1948 Arab-Israeli war, was the largest rescue since Oct. 7, when Hamas and other militants stormed across the border, killing some 1,200 people, mostly civilians, and taking around 250 hostages.

Scores of hostages are believed to be held in densely populated areas or inside Hamas' labyrinth of tunnels, making rescue attempts extremely complex and risky. A raid in February rescued two hostages while leaving 74 Palestinians dead.

Israel's massive offensive has killed over 36,700 Palestinians, according to the health ministry, which does not differentiate between civilians and combatants in its counts. It said 64 children and 57 women were killed in the latest raid, and 153 children and 161 women were among the nearly 700 wounded.

In Gaza, medics described scenes of chaos after the raid. Overwhelmed hospitals were already struggling to treat the wounded from days of heavy Israeli strikes in the area.

"We had the gamut of war wounds, trauma wounds, from amputations to eviscerations to trauma, to TBIs (traumatic brain injuries), fractures and, obviously, big burns," said Karin Huster of Doctors Without Borders, an international charity working in Al-Aqsa Martyrs Hospital.

"Kids completely grey or white from the shock, burnt, screaming for their parents. Many of them are not screaming because they are in shock."

The Israeli military said it had attacked "threats to our forces in the area," and that a special forces officer was killed in the rescue operation.

Israel's military spokesman, Rear Adm. Daniel Hagari, told reporters Saturday that the hostages were held in two apartments about 200 meters (219 yards) apart. He said the forces moved in simultaneously on both.

Rights groups hail Israel's addition to UN list of shame

Monitoring Desk
UNITED NATIONS: Human rights groups have welcomed the United Nations decision to place Israel on a "List of Shame" of countries that fail to protect children in war. The UN informed Israel about the move on Friday. Israel has killed tens of thousands of Palestinian children and maimed many more in its brutal bombing on Gaza, sparking global outrage against its military offensive.

The UN decision was welcomed by the world's two major rights groups, Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch (HRW). Amnesty Secretary General, Agnes Callamard, stated that the decision was long overdue.

"It should not have taken 15,000 children killed in Gaza for Israel to be on this shameful list," she tweeted.

"It's a thoroughly justified, albeit long overdue, move by the Secretary-General," said HRW's Louis Charbonneau.

Israel extends Al Jazeera ban by 45 days, citing security threat

Monitoring Desk
JERUSALEM: A ban on Al Jazeera's operations in Israel was extended for another 45 days by Israel's telecoms regulator on Sunday after the cabinet agreed its broadcasts posed a threat to security. A Tel Aviv court last week upheld an initial 35-day ban on Al Jazeera operations in Israel, imposed by the government on national security grounds, which ended on Saturday. In a separate ruling on a petition by Al Jazeera against the closure, Israel's Supreme Court described the measure against the Qatari-backed.

Protesters slam Biden in Gaza rally near White House

Monitoring Desk
WASHINGTON/LONDON: Thousands of protesters held a "red line" rally near the White House on Saturday, voicing anger at US President Joe Biden's tolerance of Israel's brutal military campaign against Hamas.

Chanting "From DC to Palestine, we are the red line", the demonstrators held a long banner scribbled with the names of Palestinians killed by Israeli forces.

In London thousands of people marched through the city centre to parliament calling for a permanent ceasefire in Gaza. The demonstration was organised by the Palestine Solidarity Campaign. Marchers waved Palestinian flags and chanted: "End the genocide" and "Free, free Palestine".

While Biden has faced criticism for playing a balancing act on key ally Israel's actions in the conflict, the White House said last month that a deadly Israeli strike on Rafah did not cross a "red line" that Biden had seemingly set two months earlier when asked about a potential invasion of the southern Gaza city.

China says US provoking arms race in moves into South China Sea

Monitoring Desk
BEIJING: The US poses the largest security challenge in the South China Sea as its military deployment there is turning it into "the whirlpool of an arms race". Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Sun Weidong said in remarks published on Sunday.

Recent maritime runs between China and the Philippines, a US treaty ally, have made the highly strategic South China Sea a potential flashpoint between Washington and Beijing.

"At present, the biggest security challenge in the South China Sea comes from outside the region," Sun said in comments published by his ministry, after attending a high-level meeting on East Asian cooperation in Laos. Sun said US-led forces were "promoting military deployment and actions in the South China Sea, inciting and intensifying maritime disputes and contradictions, and damaging the legitimate rights and interests of coastal countries".

A move by the United States to deploy medium-range missile systems in the area "is dragging the region into the whirlpool of an arms race, placing the entire Asia Pacific region under the shadow of geopolitical conflicts", Sun said.

China is committed to properly managing disputes with the parties in the South China Sea through dialogue, he added.

Developing countries call on US to lift Palestinian UN veto

Monitoring Desk
ISTANBUL: The D-8 group of developing nations called on Saturday for the US to lift its veto on the full membership of Palestine as an independent and sovereign state in the United Nations. The Palestinians are currently a non-member observer state, a de facto recognition of statehood that was granted by the UN General Assembly in 2012. In a declaration after a meeting in Istanbul of its council of ministers, G-8 members Bangladesh, Egypt, Indonesia, Iran, Malaysia, Nigeria, Pakistan and Turkey also demanded all countries stop supplying weapons and ammunition to Israel.

The UN General Assembly last month backed a Palestinian bid to become a full UN member by recognising it as qualified to join and recommending the UN Security Council "reconsider the matter favorably". The Palestinian push for full UN membership comes several months into a war between Israel and Palestinian militants Hamas in the Gaza Strip, and as Israel is expanding settlements in the occupied West Bank, which the UN considers to be illegal.

As the Palestinian death toll in Gaza has exceeded 36,000 and a humanitarian crisis has engulfed the enclave, human rights groups and other critics have faulted the US for providing weapons to Israel and largely defending Israel's conduct.

On Saturday, Israeli military said they rescued alive four hostages who were seized by Hamas during the Oct 7 attack in which Israeli said 1,200 people were killed and 250 abducted.

Iran OKs 6 candidates for presidential race, but again blocks Ahmadinejad

Monitoring Desk
DUBAI: Iran's Guardian Council on Sunday approved the country's hard-line parliament speaker and five others to run in the country's June 28 presidential election following a helicopter crash that killed President Ebrahim Raisi and seven others. The council again barred former President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, a firebrand populist known for the crackdown that followed his disputed 2009 re-election, from running.

The council's decision represents the starting gun for a shortened, two-week campaign to replace Raisi, a hard-line protégé of Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei once floated as a possible successor for the 85-year-old cleric.

The selection of candidates approved by the Guardian Council, a panel of clerics and jurists ultimately overseen by Khamenei, suggests Iran's Shiite theocracy hopes to ease the election through after recent votes saw record-low turnout and as tensions remain high over the country's rapidly advancing nuclear program, as well as the Israel-Hamas war.

The Guardian Council also continued its streak of not accepting a woman or anyone calling for radical change to the country's governance. So far, none of them has offered any specifics, though all have promised a better economic situation for the country as it suffers from sanctions by the U.S. and other Western nations over its nuclear program, which now enriches uranium closer than ever.

2 killed, fires rage in Lebanon after Israeli strikes

Monitoring Desk
BEIRUT: Israeli strikes on Saturday killed two people and sparked wildfires in southern Lebanon, state media said, with Hezbollah announcing the death of one fighter.

Hezbollah, a Hamas ally, has traded near-daily fire with Israeli forces in the eight months since the Gaza conflict began, triggered by Hamas' October 7 raid. The deadly clashes have intensified in recent weeks, causing multiple brush fires on both sides of the Israel-Lebanon border. Lebanon's official National News Agency (NNA) said on Saturday that "an Israeli drone carried out an air attack with two guided missiles, targeting a cafe in Aitarun and killing the cafe's owner, Ali Khalil Hamad, 37, and a young man named Mustafa A. Issa."

Pakistan to boost 26% BISP funding for poorest amidst IMF demands

ISLAMABAD (INP): Pakistan's Benazir Income Support Program (BISP), a social safety net for the poorest families, is set for a significant funding boost in the upcoming budget. The government is proposing a record allocation of Rs 593 billion, a 26% increase from the current year, in response to demands from the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

The IMF has called for expanding BISP coverage and increasing cash transfers to counter rising inflation. The proposed budget reflects these demands, with plans to add more families to the program and raise the quarterly stipend from Rs 10,500 to Rs 13,000.

Sources say the additional funding aims to increase BISP beneficiaries from 9.6 million to 9.7 million families. The goal is to eventually reach 20 million households, potentially requiring further financial support.

Negotiations are underway with the World Bank for loans to achieve this target, particularly for improving health and education outcomes under BISP's conditional cash transfer program.

While the BISP expansion brings relief to the poorest, concerns remain for the lower-middle class. This segment, often hit harder by inflation due to a lack of safety nets, might see their struggles worsen due to other IMF conditions.

The IMF is pushing for the withdrawal of reduced sales tax rates and elimination of exemptions, potentially leading to widespread price hikes on essential goods. Additionally, limiting electricity subsidies to BISP beneficiaries could further burden lower-middle-class families.

Balochistan students dream big to study in Oxford

QUETTA (APP): Seeing the pictures of world famous personalities" on a wall of Lady Margaret Hall, the University of Oxford, United Kingdom, Sadullah Akhtar, a Quetta-born Pakistani journalist was swayed by excitement as it felt to him like day dreaming.

Hailing from a low-income family, the Chevening Scholarship winner had never imagined to travel to such an honored institution in the London city - an ambition frequently voiced by Pakistan's middle class citizens.

"I am very excited to be here in London and more importantly, visiting Oxford University as a journalist was my dream that came true," Sadullah told APP. "What inspired me the most, were the pictures of Oxford University alumni that were hanging on the wall of LMH."

Starting from low level in journalism, Sadullah is now a journalist turned student at University of Westminster - a reward for his hard work to earn name in journalism to a level where he was offered this scholarship. "I am overwhelmed with excitement to be studying for one year at Westminster and visiting Oxford. My hard work finally paid me back."

Earlier, the ordinary students from Balochistan could have rarely thought of joining such world known institutions but things are now changing and a leap forward fulfilling this dream is inking an agreement with Oxford University by Chief Minister of Balochistan Mir Sarfaraz Bugti.

Giving a new hope to many aspiring students of Balochistan, this Memorandum of Understanding would provide opportunities to Balochistan students to receive scholarships from Oxford University through the Benazir Scholarship Program being executed in collaboration with Oxford Pakistan Program (OPP).

Recalling the past, Mir Sarfaraz Bugti commemorated profound legacy of Mohtarma Benazir Bhutto, whose tenure at this historical institution symbolizes a bridge between past and future leadership.

"No one can deny importance of education for a true democratic society and this MoU reflects our commitment to education and nurturing educated generation in Balochistan," Bugti remarked. "This project is hoped to mitigate educational inequalities by improving regional educational standards in collaboration with world known universities."

One who gets enrolled in Oxford must know that he will be following the footsteps of some of the most renowned Oxford qualified political figures in Pakistan, who had even served the country as our Prime Ministers and Presidents.

Imran Zarkoon Khan, Principal Secretary to Chief Minister Balochistan is also an alumnus of Oxford, who initiated this project with dedication to explore educational opportunities for Balochistan's youth.

"The scholarship, supported by OPP and its benefactors, is a tribute to visionary leadership of Mohtarma Benazir Bhutto and continues under the guidance of her son, Bilawal Bhutto," Zarkoon remarked. "It is not only a financial aid but a fundamental commitment to educational transformation and empowerment of Balochistan youth."

Benazir Scholarship Program and OPP is an initiative of its kind to help increase Pakistani students representation at a leading university and its credit goes to all contributors who struggled for better opportunities to Balochistan students.

Since its establishment three years ago, OPP has become the single largest Pakistan-focused academic platform outside Pakistan. To address the under-representation of Pakistani and British Pakistani students at Oxford; and to raise the academic profile of Pakistan and Pakistan-related areas of interest amongst Oxford's faculty are the two major objective of OPP.
