Asif rebuke Imran for making provocative statements

ISLAMABAD (APP): Defence Minister Khawaja Asif has rebuked Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) founder Imran Khan for making provocative statements, saying that his actions are escalating political tension in the country.

Asif made these comments in an exclusive interview with a private news channel on Friday, in response to a controversial social media post attributed to Khan's official X account.

The post in question referred to the Hamood-ur-Rahman Commission Report, which investigated the events leading to the separation of East Pakistan (now Bangladesh) in 1971.

Asif accused Khan of attempting to create a situation similar to the unrest on May 9, and criticized him for trying to retract the tweet after it sparked backlash.

The minister also expressed his own views on the history of East Pakistan and the tragedy of its separation, stating that exaggerating the issue only serves to increase tension.

Pak, UK sign LOI for coop. on illegal immigration, criminal justice issues

LONDON (APP): Pakistan and the United Kingdom on Friday signed a Letter of Intent (LOI) to promote bilateral collaboration on law enforcement and criminal justice issues.

Pakistan's High Commissioner to UK Dr Muhammad Faisal signed the LOI on behalf of the Government of Pakistan, according to a press release.

The LOI is aimed at collaboration between Pakistan and the UK to work together on law enforcement and criminal justice issues.

It specifically addresses the issues to tackle illegal migration and organised immigration crime, and to exploring future opportunities that benefit both countries. It will also facilitate liaison between the UK and Pakistan law enforcement agencies, in support of joint efforts to tackle transnational crime, including narcotics control, investigations of serious criminality and organised immigration crime.

Under the implementation mechanism, the cooperation will be overseen by a joint steering committee, chaired by the Ministry of Interior (MOI) and comprising representatives of Interior Ministry, National Police Bureau, British High Commission (supported by the UK Home Office), the programme team and other relevant agencies.

This agreement will help establish cooperation in the ability to share international criminal conviction data and analytics to prepare pre-emptive plans for crime prevention. Improving joint collaboration to tackle illicit finance threats, detecting criminality at air and sea borders, improving ability to facilitate extradition requests from the UK to Pakistan and Pakistan to the UK are also part of the LOI.

The LOI will also help in creating awareness and understanding of the mutual legal assistance process in both countries.

An important feature of the LOI is capacity building that encompasses exchange of information and knowledge; exchange of experts; field trips; training of staff; joint projects; conferences, workshops and provision of specific equipment.

Progress on achievements under the LOI would be undertaken through yearly review.

Trump becomes first US president convicted of a crime

NEW YORK (INP): Donald Trump became the first U.S. president to be convicted of a crime on Thursday when a New York jury found him guilty of falsifying documents to cover up a payment to silence a porn star ahead of the 2016 election. After two days of deliberation, the 12-member jury pronounced Trump guilty on all 34 felony counts he faced.

Trump watched the jurors dispassionately as they were polled to confirm the unanimous verdict.

Justice Juan Merchan set sentencing for July 11, just days before the Republican Party is scheduled to formally nominate Trump for president ahead of the Nov. 5 election. The crime of falsifying business documents carries a maximum sentence of four years in prison, though those convicted often receive shorter sentences, fines or probation.

Incarceration would not legally prevent him from campaigning, or taking office if he were to win. He will not be jailed ahead of sentencing.

The verdict plunges the United States into unexplored territory ahead of the November vote, when Trump will try to win back the White House from Democratic President Joe Biden. Trump, 77, has denied wrongdoing and an attorney representing him said they would appeal as quickly as possible.

"This was a disgrace," Trump told reporters afterwards as he proclaimed his innocence and repeated his complaints that the trial had been rigged against him.

"The real verdict is going to be Nov. 5 by the people," he said.

Trump gave a thumbs-up sign through the tinted window of his SUV as his motorcade left the courthouse. Trump supporters stood in a park opposite the courthouse along with journalists, police and onlookers.

The text of the letter stated that anti-state propaganda was disseminated through the official social media account of the PTI founder, targeting institutions, particularly the Pakistan Army.

The video posted on May 26 aimed to distort facts, prompt rebellion among officers and soldiers, and create unrest within various state institutions.

The FIA Cybercrime Cell noted that this video is a clear violation of the PICA Act 2016 and seeking access to the PTI founder in jail for further investigation.

Uncertain budget plans

With the Shehbaz Sharif-led government still fine-tuning the next budget, it might be too early to speculate upon the contents of the document. We will have to wait for a few more days before the budget proposals are firmed up and their contents finalised.

But what is certain is that in trying to achieve a balance between its political compulsions — providing succour to households no longer able to hold up against backbreaking inflation — and the necessity of plugging a deep fiscal hole in the economy, the government is faced with one of its most difficult challenges.

The confusion in the minds of the party leadership on how to deal with this paradox became even more evident on Wednesday when a PML-N meeting chaired by party leader Nawaz Sharif and attended by the prime minister decided to prepare a 'people-friendly' budget while adhering to IMF dictates. Not surprisingly, there was no official word either from the PML-N or the federal government on the outcome of the discussions. However, it is abundantly clear that the prime minister, caught between public expectations and harsh IMF demands, is in a fix.

The confusion in the PML-N over what shape the budget should take is reflective of the country's volatile political situation. On the one hand, the ruling party is not ready to lose more political capital by taking harsh measures, and on the other, it must swallow the bitter pill of stern IMF demands, if it wants to access international funding, which is crucial for reviving the economy.

At the same time, PML-N president Nawaz Sharif, who resumed his position some days ago after a long hiatus of six years following his disqualification, needs something tangible on the economic front to not just defeat the narrative of his popular arch-rival Imran Khan in Punjab but also maintain his existing public support. His party has already suffered in the February elections due to the extremely poor economic performance of the previous Shehbaz Sharif administration, which saw monthly inflation skyrocket to 38pc and interest rates jump to a record high of 22pc, besides industrial closures and job losses.

It is, therefore, safe to assume that the PML-N will do its best to meet the IMF's macroeconomic targets at the federal level, whilst taking populist measures in the Punjab budget to revive its party network in the province.

The PTI government in KP, which announced its next budget last week — much before the federal budget in a break from convention — has already shown other provinces how they can use their respective budget resources to execute the party programmes to keep their electorate happy without diverging from the IMF's conditions. There is little likelihood of other parties not giving in to this temptation.

Youth and longevity

Zubeida Mustafa

Muna Khan's interesting column titled 'Forego the FOGO' (fear of getting old) published recently on these pages was food for thought. She is spot on, especially in her observation that FOGO is driven by the global beauty industry. Muna also writes about seniors in the newsroom today not being valued for their experience. This is probably the consequence of glorifying youth to create FOGO.

When I was young, this phenomenon was called the 'generation gap'. It existed in every profession and also in family life. But unlike what happens today, the gap was managed in a very civilised manner. When I reached the age of seniority, younger colleagues like Muna and most others of her generation gave me great respect and cooperation, for which I still feel grateful. Obviously, they didn't suffer from FOGO and so acted their age and observed the courtesies they had learnt. This gap must be accepted in a positive manner if mankind has to progress, otherwise we would still be hunter-gatherers.

My concern today, however, focuses more on the many challenges 'senior citizens' face. These issues must be discussed, more so because people are reluctant to talk about them.

One issue pertains to longevity and mortality. In 1950, after the country had somewhat stabilised in the wake of the social upheaval caused by the massive transfer of population during Partition, average life expectancy at birth in Pakistan was estimated at 36.2 years for males and 33.4 for females, according to Wikipedia. Then began the multinational pharmaceutical giants' global race in quest of alchemy.

Rooted in earlier global discoveries, research and studies, the manufacture of wonder drugs and medical technologies took off, revolutionising healthcare the world over. Vaccinations dramatically lowered childhood, infant and maternal mortality rates and life expectancy at birth shot up. For instance, in 2023, Pakistan's life expectancy at birth was estimated to be 65 years for males and 69.7 for females (Worldmetre.info).

The increase in lifespan has been a universal phenomenon. Hong Kong's life expectancy in 2023 stood at 83 years for males and 88.6 for females. However, in Pakistan, the higher life expectancy has hardly been noticed. Combined with a high birth rate of 2.5 per cent, the increasing lifespan has called for greater focus on issues with a demographic dimension. This has given rise to economic and social problems for the country. No heed has been paid to the advice of a German doctor: "We must add life to years and not years to life." As has been our wont, the emphasis has been on curative medicine, with little effort to adopt preventive health measures.

Efforts by activists over the decades have failed to secure even basic financial support for seniors. As a result, we have a huge sandwich generation that is doubly burdened. It takes care of its parents as well as offspring with no social security to fall back on. The youth bulge that was supposed to be an asset to the nation is now a liability. The government has failed to give the bulk of the youth a decent education or provide them with a livelihood. It is seething with discontent.

As for seniors, they mainly need support to sustain themselves and for healthcare. Some activities to engage them are also important to create conditions that facilitate mental well-being. Those fortunate to receive a pension have to make do with what is now a pittance at a time when the country's economy is on the brink.

Not that the government is not aware of these problems. In 2014, the Sindh Assembly adopted the Senior Citizens Social Welfare Act that came into force in 2016. But it never produced any change as the chairman of the council that was set up passed away and the law remained only on paper. In 2019, the Legal Aid Society went to court and some hearings were held, but the issue seems to have been put on the backburner as normally happens in such circumstances.

Thus the twilight years of many in our society raise questions that call for a discourse to change expectations and produce doable suggestions. A discourse would provide relief from the stresses and strains that come with loneliness. It has been observed that when changes have come after a discourse, the situation has become more manageable.

Some of the sensitive issues pertaining to life and death include: palliative medicine, the question of a 'living will', which involves medical options, medical treatment, etc.

I hope this article will not give a boost to FOGO among the young. I must remind them that Botox is not the answer to their fears. It is one's approach to life, rather than one's looks, that matters. -- Courtesy Dawn

Tragedy of the commons?

Umer Farooq

In 2012, Northern Ireland launched an environmental initiative that escalated into the notorious Cash for Ash scandal. Originally designed to tackle energy issues, the plan ironically made the problem worse. The scandal unfolded around the Renewable Heat Incentive; a programme aimed at encouraging businesses to switch to green energy. However, this 20-year scheme backfired. Subsidies for using renewable energy were higher than the energy's actual cost. This glitch led businesses to increase their energy consumption to make profits, going as far as heating empty buildings. Pakistan's rooftop solar net metering is now a classic example of the same flawed policy design, making it a tragedy of the commons. Worse still is the government's mishandling of the situation.

The Pakistan government has decided to reduce the incentivised tariff for net metering on new solar installations. This policy gives the impression that the government is turning against solar energy, even if that's not the case. As new solar installations emerged, the government started to panic about consumers relying less on the traditional power grid. Should they have panicked? No.

A Lums electricity outlook report projects that in the coming years, the difference between peak load demand with and without distributed solar generation will be negligible; hence, there will be negligible impact on the capacity infrastructure of the grid. This also leaves little room for the argument that only 0.3 per cent of households, presumably wealthy, benefit from net metering with solar rooftops. If net metering for 0.3pc of households is causing difficulties with capacity payments, then the problem lies elsewhere, not with net metering. The real issues are the expensive take-or-pay guarantee model and a lack of demand for excess generation capacity.

Rolling back the incentivised net metering policy highlights the government's poor preparation. The government launched the Fast Track Solar Initiatives which aimed to replace costly imported fossil fuels with solar energy, generate solar power on 11 kV feeders, and solarise public buildings. This project pulled the interest of investors in renewable energy production like none other. However, the government's current policy against net metering contradicts this initiative. Net metering was supposed to add only 500 MWp per year for the next few years, according to the latest Indicative Generation Capacity Expansion Plan. More than 5,000 MW of existing thermal power projects are set to be retired from the NTDC system at the same time. Solar could have replaced them. It is a no-brainer.

The government has declared the grid sacred. This enthusiasm emerges from the agreements with independent power producers (IPPs) that require us to complete the capacity payments, whether we use the national grid or not. This situation makes it tricky for the government to ensure consumers stay connected to the grid. Grid reliance, tied intrinsically to capacity payments, will perpetually stand in opposition to the adoption of any renewable technologies in the future — which, of course, is not the way to go. Owing to the capacity payments, we are about to enter an era of grid nationalism.

At this stage, the government's main concern should not be regulating solar net metering. Instead, it should focus on navigating the committed capacity factor and the IPP agreements for which the capacity component is anticipated to rise significantly. Curtailing net metering will hardly solve the problem. As a wise man once said, "The reason most ma--jor goals are not achieved is that we spend our time doing second things first."

With a new generation surplus on the horizon, the weighted average cost of generation will burden poor consumers, which it should not. We must avoid repeating western Australia's mid-2000s mistake, where a projected surplus never materialised under the capacity electricity agreement, forcing them to pay $85 per MWh compared to $35 per MWh in eastern Australia. We are in a dire situation where the economic outlook does not support increased electricity demand. Our dollar exchange rate projections were incorrect, worsening the problem. To resolve this, the government must expand the base load by introducing commercial and industrial energy demand. Designing a sensible gross metering concept could also benefit domestic consumers significantly. The situation also makes a case for electric vehicles that can not only reduce the need for imported fuel but also use the surplus capacity. Studies show that half a million EVs can be fully charged with 1,000 MW — an excellent solution. There are alternatives. -- Courtesy Dawn

Off take from Wind Power Projects to Grid Cheap electricity at Rs. 14.5/ unit should be Utilized: Atif Ikram

Independent Report KARACHI: Mr. Atif Ikram Sheikh, President FPCCI, has urged to prioritize immediate and complete off take of power from existing, operational and cheapest 12 wind power projects; wherein these wind power plants are producing electricity at a cost of 14.5 rupees per unit. This aligns with both the Renewable Energy Policy 2006 — pursuant to which local and foreign investment had taken place — and the existing energy purchase agreements (PPAs). Mr. Saquib Fayyaz Magoon, SVP FPCCI, maintained that recently K-Electric has showcased its efforts to achieve a 30 percent share of renewable energy generation in its mix by 2030. Authorities should take some steps to dispatch electricity from these cheapest 12 wind power projects to KE network since transmission infrastructure is available between NTDC's Jhimpir-II grid station to KE's KDA transmission infrastructure; which will prevent the wastage of cheap electricity and utilization of such cheap electricity will give a sigh of relief to common public.

Blinken says Washington approved use of US weapons by Ukraine inside Russia

Monitoring Desk
WASHINGTON: US President Joe Biden approved Ukraine using US weapons to strike targets inside Russia that were attacking the Ukrainian city of Kharkiv, after Kyiv sought authorisation from Washington in recent weeks, US Secretary of State Antony Blinken confirmed on Friday.

Speaking at a news conference in Prague after an informal meeting of Nato foreign ministers, Blinken did not specifically say whether Biden's authorisation could expand to include other Russian cities and targets deeper inside Russia. Outgunned and out-manned on the battlefield, Kyiv has been increasing pressure on its Western allies to be able to launch offensive strikes at military targets inside Russia to better repel Russian advances.

Blinken said Washington's move, a marked change in policy by Biden, who steadfastly refused to allow Ukraine to use American weaponry inside Russia, was a result of the US adjusting and adapting to the battleground. Now, he said, the US is responding to what it has seen in and around the Kharkiv region.

"Over the past few weeks, Ukraine came to us and asked for the authorisation to use weapons that we're providing to defend against this aggression, including against Russian forces that are massing on the Russian side of the border and then attacking into Ukraine," Blinken said.

"And that went right to the president, and as you've heard, he's approved [the] use of our weapons for that purpose. Going forward, we'll continue to do what we've been doing, which is as necessary adapt and adjust," Blinken said.

Kharkiv, Ukraine's second-largest city, is 30 kilometres from the border with Russia.

It is the second time this year that Biden has quietly relaxed his policy on weapons supplies for Ukraine. Earlier this year, he bent to calls to send long-range missiles known as ATACMS to Kyiv.

US officials said on Thursday that US policy would continue to prohibit the Ukrainian military from using ATACMS, which have a range of up to 300km, and other long-range US weapons for deep strikes inside Russia.

The US is the biggest supplier of weapons to Ukraine in its battle against the full-scale invasion launched by Russian President Vladimir Putin in February 2022.

Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky said on Friday that Ukraine using any Western weapon to strike Russian territory is "a question of time".

"I think that using any weapon, Western kind of weapon, on the territory of Russia is a question of time. Otherwise, it is not about just peace," Zelensky told reporters on a visit to Stockholm.

Ukraine has stressed the urgency for the use of Western-supplied arms to conduct strikes inside Russia as it defends against Russian advances in the northeastern Kharkiv region.

This spring, Ukraine found itself on the back foot in the 27-month-old full-scale invasion as it faces delays in military aid from the US, increased attacks on its energy infrastructure and Russia's push to expand the frontline.

NATO ministers meet in Prague as allies ease restrictions on Ukraine's use of their weapons

Monitoring Desk

PRAGUE: NATO foreign ministers were meeting in the Czech capital Friday to prepare for this summer's leaders' summit as the alliance boosts support for Ukraine and countries one-by-one remove restrictions on how Kyiv can use western-supplied weaponry to combat Russia's invasion.

A day after US President Joe Biden gave Ukraine the go-ahead to use American munitions to strike inside Russia for the limited purpose of defending Kharkiv, numerous ministers, including those from the Netherlands, Finland, Poland and Germany, expressed approval of the decision, saying that Ukraine has the absolute right to defend itself from attacks originating on Russian soil.

The chorus of allied voices backing greater leeway for Ukraine to use their weapons grew louder in recent weeks after Russia launched artillery strikes on Kharkiv from its territory, prompting appeals for help from Kyiv. US Secretary of State Antony Blinken had hinted strongly this week.

Beijing wants to work with Arab states to resolve thorny issues: President Xi

Monitoring Desk

BEIJING: China wants to work with Arab nations to resolve hot spot issues in ways conducive to upholding fairness, justice and achieving long-term peace and stability, President Xi Jinping said in a speech on Thursday that also highlighted the Gaza crisis.

China is seeking to strengthen its relations with Arab states as a model for maintaining world peace and stability, Xi was quoted as saying by state media at the China-Arab States Cooperation Forum in Beijing.

In remarks about the war in Gaza, the Chinese leader said war cannot continue indefinitely, justice cannot be permanently absent and a "two-state solution" should be firmly upheld.

"In the face of a turbulent world, mutual respect is the way to live in harmony, and fairness and justice are the foundation of lasting security," Xi was quoted as saying by Xinhua news.

He was addressing the heads of state of Bahrain, Egypt, the United Arab Emirates and Tunisia as well as foreign ministers from other Arab League nations. Beijing has repeatedly called for a two-state solution to the Palestinian-Israeli crisis as well as an immediate ceasefire and Palestinian membership in the United Nations — positions which align closely with those of Arab nations.

China is increasingly flexing its diplomatic influence in the region, recently hosting the first talks on Chinese soil between the long-feuding Palestinian factions Hamas and Fatah in April. Last year, China also brokered a landmark reconciliation deal between Iran and Saudi Arabia after years of hostilities between the two arch-rivals.

The Gaza crisis has threatened to push the region into a wider conflict, especially after recent tit-for-tat attacks by Israel and Iran.

Sudan at 'imminent risk of famine', UN aid chiefs warn

Monitoring Desk

GENEVA: The people of Sudan are at "imminent risk of famine", United Nations agencies said on Friday, more than a year into a war between the army and the paramilitary Rapid Support Forces (RSF).

Around 18 million people are already acutely hungry, including 3.6 million children who are acutely malnourished, according to a joint statement by UN chiefs including Volker Turk, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights. "Time is running out for millions of people in Sudan who are at imminent risk of famine, displaced from their lands, living under bombardments, and cut off from humanitarian assistance," the statement added. Fighting broke out in the capital Khartoum in April 2023 and quickly spread across the country, reigniting ethnic bloodshed in the western Darfur region and forcing millions to flee in the world's largest displacement crisis.

"Without an immediate and major step change, we will face a nightmare scenario: A famine will take hold in large parts of the country," read the statement also signed by UN aid chief Martin Griffiths.

The war broke out as long-simmering tensions over integrating the RSF with the army came to a head. The UN special adviser on the prevention of genocide said last week there was a risk of genocide in parts of Darfur. A UN-backed report said in March that immediate action was needed to "prevent widespread death and total collapse of livelihoods."

PM calls for joint efforts to build a 'tobacco-free' Pakistan

ISLAMABAD (APP): On the World No Tobacco Day, Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif has pledged to intensify his efforts to reduce tobacco production and consumption, with the ultimate goal of creating a tobacco-free Pakistan.

The prime minister, in his message on Friday, urged the stakeholders including the civil society, professional associations, non-governmental organizations, and the media to collaborate with the government in its national efforts for eliminating the menace from the society.

"By firmly rejecting tobacco, we can establish the groundwork for a healthier and more prosperous Pakistan. Let's resolve, say 'No to Tobacco' and work together for building a tobacco-free Pakistan," he added.

He said the Day served as a powerful reminder of the collective effort needed to combat the pervasive and devastating impact of tobacco use on public health.

This year's theme "Protecting Children From Tobacco Industry Interference" focuses on safeguarding our future generations by ensuring that tobacco use continues to decline.

It is important to note that tobacco not only impacts the individuals who consume it but also has detrimental effects on the well-being of those in close proximity. PM Shehbaz said Pakistan was amongst the 15 countries of the world, having a heavy burden of tobacco-related ill health and "faces a double burden of disease primarily cancers, cardiovascular diseases, diabetes and chronic respiratory diseases".

The government, he said, had taken stringent measures to curb tobacco use which included placing large-sized pictorial health warnings on tobacco packages, banning the sale of loose cigarettes, banning point-of-sale displays and increasing tobacco taxation. However to completely eliminate from Pakistan, both production and consumption of tobacco must be reduced.

He said the government had raised taxation on cigarettes to about 150% to discourage the use of tobacco.

"Moreover, all forms of tobacco advertising and promotion are prohibited, including advertising on national TV, radio, print media, billboards, point of sale advertising and product display."

LAHORE (INP): The Lahore High Court (LHC) has sought a response from the federation regarding the admissibility of a petition seeking initiation of contempt proceedings against Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif over his 'derogatory' remarks about judges. He said the written order had not yet been received from the apex court. Subsequently, the court, while issuing a notice, sought a response from the federal government regarding the admissibility of the contempt petition against the prime minister.
