A new operation

Serious concerns had been raised by opposition political parties — particularly those with presence in KP — after Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif announced the launch of Operation Azm-i-Istehkam on Saturday. Considering that KP has been hit the hardest by terrorism, the concerns raised by these parties were understandable, as local communities were worried about fresh violence and displacement, similar to what was witnessed during resolve to eradica---te exearlier military campaigns.

Reacting to these concerns, the administration clarified matters on Monday when, in a statement released by the PM Office, it was pointed out that no large-scale displacement will take place, and the envisaged operation will largely be a 'mopping up' exercise to clear out the "remnants" of militant groups. There can be little doubt about the need to crush the terrorist threat before it gains further strength. It is a fact that militant actors have regrouped after nearly every previous military operation. Thus, to make Azm-i-Istehkam a success, the lacunae of past operations must be studied minutely. The new operation also seems to be partly influenced by vocal Chinese concerns about friends who have backed the need for security in Pakistan. Whatever the triggers, clear deterrent action is needed against terrorist groups, but without upending the lives of people in the affected areas, and causing mass displacement. The state seems to have realised the state seems to have realised the the project. A sip-up in the new House could be politically fatal and, of course, hugely embarrassing, too. Without Modi at the holm skeletons are need for this balance, as reflected in Monday's PMO statement. The government should continue to take all stakeholders on board, as without feedback from all political forces, it will be difficult to convince the affected populations of the operation's necessity. True, operational details cannot be divulged; but, if need be, sensitive information can be shared with lawmakers in camera. Moreover, Pakistan has been losing an unacceptably high number of security men to terrorist attacks over the past few years. The latest attack came last week in Kurram, in which five troops were martyred. This is not a conventional war, and the military needs to consider forming specialised units trained to counter the asymmetric measures employed by militant groups. In the cities, it is the police, through the CT departments, that should be leading sound strategies, its outthe fight against terrorist groups. The state must also continue to communicate to the Afghan Taliban the need five years. to prevent their soil from being used against Pakistan, and to rein in the TTP. This pressure needs to continue along firmed the accuracy of the with CT operations on Pakistani soil. And, as the military takes on the militants on the major outcomes in just 100 days. But by then, it battlefield, a complementary must at least present a effort against extremism will also be required. As witnessed in the aftermath of earlier military campaigns, unless the support structure of terrorist groups in the country is completely dismantled, these entities can spring up with new names. The twin battles against militancy and extremism will not be easy to fight, but are essential for Pakistan.

Back to the battlefield

In the midst of a budget debate, the government also held a meeting on security and made some big decisions — decisions perhaps far weightier than taxing the salaried class, which comes as easy to all governments as claiming their success in fixing Pakistan's economy.

But to return to the weighty matter of security, the government called an apex committee meeting on Saturday and announced a new 'operation' against terrorism. The prime minister approved a 'reinvigorated and re-energised national counterterrorism [CT] campaign through the launching of Operation Azm-i-Istehkam, with the consensus of all stakeholders including the provinces, Gilgit-Baltistan and Azad Jammu and Kas-hmir, symbolising the national remism and terrorism from the country"

It seems extremism and terrorism are now beng seen as twin problems. The press release mentioned a reinvigorated CT strategy, the use of kinetic force, effective legislation and socioeconomic measures. The National Action Plan was also brought in.

It is worth pointing out that this announcement comes a little over a year after a similar announcement. In April 2023, the PDM government called a National Security Committee meeting, after which it was reported that "The meeting approved launching of an all-out comprehensive operation with the [help] of the entire nation and the government" One news story added that the government had formed a committee to prepare a report within weeks about the "limitations and implementation" of the operation. It seems this committee proved as effective as the many committees formed to suggest 'austerity measures', because little is known about the fate of the report. Perhaps one can venture to say it didn't prove all that successful because the government has now announced another operation. And this time around, the resolve is stronger — the new operation has been given a name, unlike the un-christened one announced in 2023.

be taken more seriously because of the public request made by the Chinese for better security

But even if the government resolve and seriousness is accepted as gospel truth, it is hard to quell questions. The problem with pesky souls is that, despite being told about the utmost importance of security, they grapple with doubts, which lead to questions, especially as the press release, while lengthy, appeared short on detail.

It is hard to tell if this new operation will focus on intelligence-based operations (as in the recent past) rather than full-scale operations, as we saw in the noughties. The government has not clarified this. While the press release speaks of a CT campaign, the government did not respond to the uproar created by the PTI in parliament by simply saving that there would not be full-scale military operations as in the past. Instead. the focus was on criticising the PTI for its lack of sup-

This does indicate, circumstantially, that largescale operations are part of more questions than it answers. The environment in 2008 was very different when large-scale operations were launched. Back then, the TTP was in control of territory and the operations were launched, along with mass displacement of people, to dislodge the militants and impose the 'writ of the state'. So far, from the little that appears in the press, the TTP is not con-

Second, the last time around, it appeared the operations were partly based on assumptions that once the TTP fighters tried to escape the military operations by crossing the border, they would be confronted by Afghan and Nato forces. In fact, in those days, there was constant communication between the two sides and efforts at cooperation as well as complaints about the lack of assistance. However, this time around, the border and Afghanistan will make operations more difficult, as the regime in Kabul is already providing havens to the TTP.

Third, the large-scale operations earlier enjoyed the latter didn't just come from the urban centres and the mainstream areas of the country but also political parties based in KP. This included the ANP and PPP which dominated the province, headed the government and were present in the legislatures.

However, this time around, this support will not be easy to ensure because the people are openly hostile to opera-

The mass-scale displacement of people due to the operations, the challenges of living in refugee camps, and then their return to homes and livelihoods destroyed by war and delayed compensations, has made the Pakhtun population wary. This has been brought home by the mass protests that were held in many areas when the TTP reappeared in 2022. The large gatherings in a number of areas, including Swat, were not simply against the TTP but also against military action; such is the public mood that all parties took a stand against

It is noteworthy that the PTM, which enjoys However, this raises widespread public support; widespread support, is also critical of military operations; in fact, its emergence and street politics was aimed at raising awareness about the sufferings of the Pakhtun population due to militancy and the state's actions to eradicate it.

This distrust of the state and its institutions will not make it easy to create public support for widespread use of state force, as in the past.

Last, but not least, there is also the issue of expense. The extensive military operations in the past took place at a time when aid from the US in the form of coalition support funds was still making its way to Pakistan. At present, with no such aid and the cash crunch the country is dealing with, any planning for military operations will also have to consider how they will be financed. So far, there have been few answers to these concerns in the press release or the debate in parliament. Perhaps once the government is free from budget worries, some of the details will be thrashed out and made public, ensuring that we don't need another such meeting and announcement a year on. -- Cour-

Critical days for Modi and rivals

Jawed Nagvi

The underplayed defeat for his government by 32 seats in the parliamentary elections, with a whopping loss of 63 BJP MPs from the previous tally, may have reined in Prime Minister Modi's self-obsessed march on Indian democracy for now. His new and untested experiment with a coalition government has just begun, with the openng of the 18th Lok Sabha on Monday.

Modi must cling to power not only for himself and his hatchet man, the home minister, but also for his corporate him from his days as Gujarat chief minister, benefiting both sides in assorted ways.

An imperative for Modi to effectively fend off the three challenges from the opposition, the allies, and within the Hindutva fold — to keep his grip on power, lies in the election of the Speaker of the Lok Sabha. Hundred days on

Dr Niaz Murtaza

Lurching from one controversy to another, the PML-N has marked 100 days in power. To ensure accountability and public welfare, one must regularly review the outcomes of all regimes via a sound framework The one I use says that the quality of outcomes of a regime depends on the quality of its strategies which in turn depend on the quality of its team. Outcomes occur in five domains (economic, political, social, security and external) and functions (legislation, policy, projects, services and institutional reform). This comprehensive framework allows analysis. while its cause and effect links give it predictive powers: if a set-up can't present a quality team or comes will be poor. In fact, by looking at the team, one can predict accurately, even within months, how it will do in Seeing its weak team, I had predicted in 2018 that the PTI wouldn't deliver. My following reviews using this lens conprediction. Unluckily, the same is true for the PML-N. No set-up can show compelling vision, policies and a competent team, especially given the nature of crises we face. That this hasn't happened in three months is cause for alarm. And if it doesn't happen in six months, it may be cause to start writing its obituary predictively. The cabinet, even in critical areas like the economy, interior, law, foreign affairs and social sectors, largely has inept persons, reflecting the demands of powerful ment, various Noonie factions, and allies. One struggles to find persons with serious expertise in the ministries assigned to them. The finance minister is the new kid on the block. But though better than Ishaq Dar, he lacks the serious macroeconomic, IMF and public finance credentials needed to deal with our economic crisis. Also, the finance minister largely deals with fiscal matters. To upgrade the economy, one needs competent persons in investment, commerce, IT and industry posts, which are largely filled with inept political appointees. The icing on the cake, the prime minister, shows no ability to graduate beyond his federally irrelevant projects

The team's gaps show in the lack of sound vision and strategy in all five domains and functions. Reflecting its lack of a sound economic vision, the recent budget does badly on key criteria, such as cutting wasteful outlays and subsidies, identifying new and equitable sources of direct taxes, encouraging durable growth in productive sectors and exports, and ensuring equity. It may deliver temporary stability and an IMF deal. But by perpetuating the root causes of our economic ills, it is laying the ground for future economic cri-

Politically, we need civilian sway, political legitimacy and civil rights. The PML-N lacks control over key federal areas such economy, defence, interior and foreign affairs, having meekly given them to the estab-lishment. Its mandate is rigged, apparently even more than the PTI's. Under the establishment's push, it is taking harsh steps to curtail civil rights, such as cracking forces like the establish- down on media, X, the opposition and dissidents, even more so than the PTI. One sees no legislative agenda to deal with our constitutional tions are due for state leg-and political challenges. The security situation is precarious, with militant groups in KP and Balochistan and criminal gangs in Sindh and Punjab. Socially, extremism is rampant, resulting in a horrendous situation for women, children and religious minorities. Yet, bey-o--nd empty stern warnings from both Pindi and Islamabad after every incident, one sees little vision or capacity to address the root causes of insecurity or extremism in any region.

Externally, ties with major powers like China, the West and Gulf states have improved a bit, but without creating major opportunities to help us economically. Both China and the Gulf states seem reluctant to invest heavily in Pakistan, given the state's lack of vision and the failure to inspire confidence, as was true for the PTI.

Unless the PML-N co-opts able hands, there is little chance of it giving major positive outcomes in five years even if it lasts that long. So, as with the PTI, the establishment's new hybrid experiment may fail.

The 2008-18 era, when it had withdrawn partially from politics, had yielded some political evolution, which may have improved governance too had it been allowed to flourish. But its post-2017 forays have wiped off all those gains and pushed us back by decades. Civilian sway and political legitimacy remain our only way forward, and even that is a long route to progress. But the establishment shows no signs of accepting that. -- Courtesy

This year's Haj turned tragic as over 1,300 pilgrims succumbed to soaring temperatures, which reached a blistering 51.8 degrees Celsius. This calamity marks a new chapter in the saga of extreme weather events gripping the planet, a phenomenon UN Secretary General António Guterres dubbed "global boiling"

The deadly heatwave in Saudi Arabia is part of a broader trend of unprecedented heat affecting regions worldwide. Earlier this month, Pakistan and India faced similar extreme conditions. In Sindh, temperatures skyrocketed to over 52°C, with Mohenjodaro experiencing 52.2°C, nearly matching the country's record high of 54°C.

Across the border, the situation is equally dire. The Indian Meteorological Department has issued a red alert for the country's longest-ever heatwave. Over 100 deaths and 44,000 cases of heatstroke have been reported, with Delhi's temperatures surpassing 44°C, severely affecting the quality of life and economic activities.

In July 2023, Secretary General Guterres introduced the term 'global boiling' to describe the escalating impacts of climate change, indicating that the planet was transitioning from 'global warming' to a more extreme and perilous state. Initially met with scepticism, this term has since gained alarming validation as unusual weather patterns, including extreme heatwaves and unprecedented rainfall, have been observed globally.

One of the most alarming aspects of climate change is its unpredictability. Events that defy historical patterns have become the health, agriculture, and new norm, catching comextreme heat to cold is quite intriguing. For instance, only weeks ago near Makkah, where extreme heat has killed hundreds there were unprecedented flash floods. Videos circulating on social media show powerful floods sweeping across the Fatma Wadi in Al Jumum Governorate. According to witnesses, for the first time in recorded history, the local wadi overflowed.

In April this year, Dubai experienced recordbreaking rainfall, the heaviest in over 75 years. Social media and TV screens were flooded with images of luxury cars, including Rolls Royces, Porsches Lamborghinis, floating through Dubai's waterlogged streets.

The floods wreaked havoc, resulting in deaths in the UAE and Oman, where 10 children died when their school bus was swept away. Over 1,000 flights at Dubai's airport, one of the world's busiest, were cancelled, causing significant travel disruptions. Such severe storms and heavy rainfalls in April also led to flooding and fatalities in Pakistan and Afghanistan, Pakistan and Afghanistan reported several deaths caused by heavy rains and snowfall.

'Global boiling' munities off guard. This temperatures and changclimate ping-pong of ing precipitation patterns drought to flooding and reduce crop yields, increasing the risk of droughts and floods, thereby disrupting food production and supply chains. Accelerated melting of polar ice caps and glaciers contributes to rising sea levels, while thawing permafrost releases large quantities of greenhouse gases like methane, exacerbating global warming. Drastic changes in habitats lead to the extinction of species unable to adapt, with coral reefs wi--d-espread bleaching and die-offs due to tem--p-e-rature sens--itivity.

The term 'global boiling' underscores the urgency and severity of the climate crisis. The unprecedented heatwaves, torrential rains, and their devastating impacts are a stark reminder of the need for immediate and robust climate action. As nations grapple with these extreme events, the global community prioritise sustainable practices and policies to mitigate the escalating impacts of climate change and safeguard the planet for future generations.

The idea of 'global boiling' ironically aligns with the 'boiling frog syndrome'. This metaphor illustrates the dangers of complacency and gradual change. Accor-ding to the story, if a frog is put in boiling water, it will try to save itself by quickly jumping out. However, if it is placed in cold water that is slowly warmed, it will not be able to see the danger and will die as the water heats up. This metaphor aptly captures human complacency towards climate action. Nature, it seems, has escalated from 'warming' to 'boiling' to deliver a massive jolt from the climate cauldron. -Courtesy Dawn

Pak needs American investment in IT, energy, agriculture and mineral extraction: Masood

Pakistan's Ambassador to the United States, Masood Khan, invited American entrepreneurs and corporate leaders to invest in IT, energy, agriculture, and mineral extraction when he met hem in Washington on Monday, according to a Pakistani embassy's press release.

The ambassador told the business leaders that the US International Trade Administration had identified several advantages for American investors in Pakistan, including the absence of shareholding restrictions, simple work permit regulations, no technology transfer requirements, and a large and sophisticated entrepreneurial community."A new entity Special Investment Facilitation Council – has been created to facilitate foreign inflows into these he told the gathering.Pointing out that Pakistan was the world's fourth largest freelance provider with over 20,000 ICT registered companies, the ambassador noted that the IT sector, especially tech startups were fast becoming a growth industry in Pakistan.

He also projected that power sector was another priority area as the country wanted to double its energy production from the current level of 45,000MW in a decade and make a fast transition to renewables.

The Pakistani envoy also invited the attention of US entrepreneurs to the treasure trove of minerals in Pakistan that included copper, gold, lead, zinc, iron ore, coal, lithium, rare earth, cobalt, aluminum, chromite and nickel.

China's premier slams trade tensions as EV exports are hit by tariffs

Monitoring Desk

TAIPEI: Open markets and green technologies are vital for stabilizing global growth, China's premier said Tuesday, while criticizing trade tensions as he opened a conference in northeastern China.

Premier Li Qiang told political and business leaders attending the World Economic Forum Annual Meeting of the New Champions, also known as the "Summer Davos," that China is on track to attain Beijing's growth target this year of 5%.

Countries should 'work closely together, reject bloc confrontation, oppose decoupling and disconnection, maintain stability and smoothness of industrial and supply chains, and promote trade and investment liberalization and facilitation," Li said in a speech to the conference.

We cannot slow down our pace in green transition in exchange for short-term economic growth nor practice protectionism in the name of green development or environmental protection, he said. China is facing pushback over its electric vehicle exports, which some governments fear will flood markets and hurt domestic producers. The European Union and Canada among others are mulling surtaxes on Chinese EVs. China and the E.U. said over the weekend they are open to talks over the tentative tariffs after Beijing last announced an antidumping probe into European pork, largely seen as retaliation for the EV duties.
