"The economic downturn began with the ousting of Nawaz Sharif, not during our tenure," Dar asserted. He criticized the PTI's previous government for exacerbating the country's financial instability, alleging that PTI left the economy on the brink of default within six to seven months of their rule and accused them of rigging the 2018 elections to place their leader in power.

In a press conference held in Sialkot, Asif criticized PTI's political motives, stating, "The only aim of PTI is power."

Senior PPP leader Farhatullah Babar criticized the notion of banning a political party or prosecuting a leader for treason, calling such measures "nonsense" that would lead to a severe political crisis. He warned that while American democracy could withstand its current turmoil, Pakistani democracy and the state might not survive a self-imposed crisis.

Speaking at his daily news briefing in Washington, US State Department Spokesperson Matthew Miller responded to questions regarding the "possible restrictions on PTI".

The interior minister inspected the procession route, met with organizers to inquire about arrangements and gave instructions to IG Islamabad Police Ali Nasir Rizvi and CDA Chairman Muhammad Ali Randhawa regarding security protocols.

He also issued directives for the implementation of a special security plan across all four provinces, Gilgit-Baltistan and Azad Kashmir, ensuring strict adherence to the plan.

Miller stated that the US has observed government statements imposing restrictions on political parties, which raises concerns that such actions could mark the beginning of a political crackdown. He said that the US will closely monitor these internal developments and decisions.

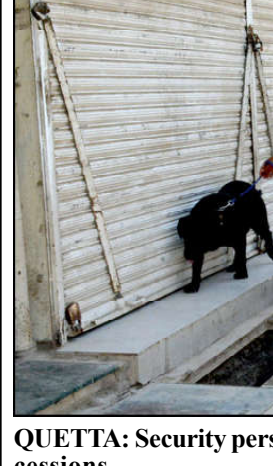

He also conducted an aerial inspection of the entire procession route, ensuring that all necessary measures were in place.

Miller added that any restrictions on political parties are worrisome because they contradict human rights, freedom of expression, constitutional, and democratic principles.

He assured the public that the federal government was providing all necessary support to maintain peace in Islamabad, Azad Kashmir and Gilgit-Baltistan.

He emphasized that the United States has always supported actions promoting justice, including adherence to democratic practices and broader principles and laws. Miller further said that the Pakistani government's decision to ban the PTI was a complex political process but added that it would be concerned if a political party were banned. "Our understanding is this is the beginning of what would be a complete complex political process, but certainly banning of a political party is something that would be a great concern to us," he added.

Banning PTI

It is dangerous for a government to appear so desperate. Like grains of sand, power slips quicker from the hand the tighter the fist is clenched. In their obsession with countering the resurgent PTI, the ruling parties are, wittingly or unwittingly, pushing the country towards even more chaos and anarchy instead of accepting ground realities and working around them.

Though 11 judges of the Supreme Court, including the chief justice, only last week recognised the PTI's bona fides as a political party, the coalition government is now seeking a complete ban on the party itself.

The shock proclamation came on Monday afternoon, along with announcements that the government had decided to seek a review of the Supreme Court's ruling in the reserved seats case as well as proceedings under Article 6 against former president Arif Alvi, former prime minister Imran Khan, and former deputy speaker of the National Assembly, Qasim Suri.

Was this the government's best response to losing its two-thirds majority, which, in any case, had only been secured thanks to a series of unconstitutional and unlawful decisions taken by the Election Commission? Was the prospect of the largest party in parliament being restored to its rightful status so alarming that the ruling parties, in the tradition of military dictators, would seek to ban it on dubious charges?

If the government thought it was projecting power through Information Minister Atta Tarar's Monday press conference, it was gravely mistaken. It only managed to appear desperate and intimidated, clutching at straws while the tide rises around it. One can only hope that it was merely testing the waters for what the reaction may be to such a move. Nevertheless, it was a shock that the stalwarts in its ranks had not shot down the proposal before a minister went public with it.

It appears that the government and its backers within the establishment have still not realised that they are in uncharted territory. Previous regimes that ruled through political coercion and fear tactics had strong economies backing them. The conditions right now appear to be far from conducive for the type of brinkmanship and adventurism being displayed by the current regime. If the idea is to precipitate a collapse of the democratic political order, then, by all means, the authorities should proceed.

However, if social and economic stability is what is sought, they would be well-advised to undertake a hard course correction. At the same time, the PTI also needs to display some flexibility and greater maturity. It appears that it has gained enough leverage to be able to achieve its political objectives without the country having to travel further down the path of political violence and social instability. Victory in politics is rarely absolute. It must open itself to negotiations.

Lessons not learnt

Naseer Memon

The tumult generated by the collapse of Gate 47 of Sukkur Barrage in Sindh subsided after the irrigation department brought the situation under control by constructing a cofferdam. This was made possible by dextrously dumping over 3,000 sand-filled, one-tonne sacks amid a flow of over 100,000 cusecs. Department engineers and local fishermen worked round the clock to contain the crisis. A 9-by-18-metre sandbag platform was created to block the flow of water, thus enabling the fixing of a caisson in place of the collapsed gate. The authorities heaved a sigh of relief as water supply to the canals was restored partially.

Moreover, work to replace Gate 47 has commenced before the scheduled date. Local media, growers' organisations and civil society forums are abuzz with all manner of speculation and apprehension. Meanwhile, four senior officials who were posted at the barrage have been removed.

Lowering the pond level by draining water downstream revealed more gates with cracks. Gates 46, 48, 52, 53 and 54 showed structural fatigue, which points to a lack of regular inspection and maintenance. It underscores the need for an urgent inspection of all gates to ensure structural safety before the monsoons trigger massive river flows. A crack in a gate or the masonry structure of the barrage is not something to be shrugged off, as it could result in devastating consequences if not addressed at an early stage.

An incident from June 2018 should have served as a lesson for the authorities. On June 21, 2018, staff at the Sukkur Barrage noticed a crack on the outer flange of the upper girder of Gate 39 during a routine inspection. An in-depth technical study was conducted by Atkins, ACE & NDC Joint Venture in July 2018. The report revealed that the web plate of the girder showed high corrosion in almost all parts. The epoxy coating of horizontal surfaces of the components of the structure had either been totally eroded or badly damaged. This was on account of a leaking water jet that was directly impacting these horizontal surfaces.

Most of the bolts connecting the different components were badly rusted. The two horizontal stiffeners welded at the skin plates showed deterioration due to algae. Only 17 bolts were fixed in the two cover plates of the back flange, against a total of 24 holes available in the two plates. Two bolts were fastened without washers; while 15 washers were of different sizes.

Similar deterioration was noted in Gate 38, though the damage was less severe. The report also mentioned that Gates 15 to 23 had wooden plank extensions to raise the pond level. The tail channel gates were found to be leaking heavily, with water showers falling on the upper girder of most of the gates. Extensive accumulation of waste material was observed upstream in a few gates. Gate 39 especially had been exposed to a large accumulation of waste material extending to about 6m to 7m.

The original river sluice gates of the barrage were 5.6m in height so that a pond level of around 60m could be achieved. However, in 1966, the height of the gates was increased by approximately half a metre to achieve a higher pond level. New gates were installed during 1988-92 after the collapse of a gate in 1982. However, to further increase the pond level, these gates were increased in height by half a metre in 2008-10, with the use of wooden planks. Leakage from these planks caused rusting in different sections of the gates.

An inspection of the Sukkur Barrage gates was assigned to NED University in January 2019 under the Sindh Barrages Improvement Project. A team of experts inspected 20 gates. The report revealed that while the upper sections of the gates were in stable condition, the lower sections of most of the gates had been severely corroded. Fourteen gates showed a reduction in thickness in the lower portion. The reduction was estimated to be less than 10 per cent in the vertical girder flanges, the web plates and main skin plates of these gates. On the other hand, seven gates showed a reduction in thickness of below 20pc. The report recommended either repairing the lower sections of the gates or replacing them along with girders. Subsequently six gates were replaced.

A technical investigation into the damage done to Gate 39 in 2018 and the rupture of a gate in 1982 provides sufficient evidence of structural fatigue.

Increased surveillance and regular maintenance of the barrage gates is absolutely essential to avert a dangerous situation. The authorities must not delay matters on this count. - Courtesy Dawn

Sindh Labour Code

Parvez Rahim

Over the last four decades or so, at least three labour commissions were formed to consolidate and simplify labour laws. However, the suggestions they made and the draft legislation they proposed were not even considered for putting up before parliament.

There are some 190 labour enactments and rules made thereunder, with different definitions of 'worker', 'employer' and 'establishment'. Besides, the laws and rules have outdated provisions. For instance, there is the Payment of Wages Act, 1936, and three Rules of 1937, 1938 and 1960. Then there are the Minimum Wages Ordinance, 1961, the Rules of 1962 and the West Pakistan Minimum Wages for Unskilled Workers Ordinance, 1969.

Labour laws should be simple, especially for those ensuring compliance with statutory requirements. The Sindh government, in collaboration with the ILO, has prepared and circulated the Sindh Labour Code, 2024, among employers and workers' bodies. The SLC is purported to have consolidated 20 labour laws, inclusive of legislation such as the Industrial & Commercial Employment (Standing Orders) Ordinance; Factories Act; Industrial Relations Act; Shops & Establishments Act, etc.

Separate meetings organised by the Employers' Federation of Pakistan and the National Trade Union Federation were held on June 8, 2024, to discuss the draft legislation contained in the 318-page SLC. In the EFP meeting, participants were of the view that consolidation should have been based on existing laws, making their enforcement simple by removing obsolete provisions and making them relevant to existing needs.

Instead, the draft legislation of the SLC is very complicated and confusing. For instance, 'worker' is defined as an employee, but 'employee' has been defined separately. Besides, it is mentioned that "a person exercising the authority, duties or responsibilities of an employer" is a worker.

It is mentioned that a person is a worker irrespective of the nature of work, which includes "skilled, unskilled, intellectual, clerical, professional, managerial, administrative and any other kind of work".

The Industrial & Commercial Employment (Standing Orders) Ordinance, 1968, defines 'workman' as any person employed to do any skilled or unskilled, manual or clerical work for hire or reward. Based on this definition, progressive organisations have divided their workforce into two categories: management and non-management. They have been managing employee relations successfully with this structure over more than five decades.

Now that this structure is being dismantled through the SLC and all the employees of an organisation are to be considered as 'workers' except for the 'occupier', it is difficult to comprehend how businesses will be operated and discipline maintained without the well-established layers of management hierarchy. Various provisions of the SLC are so complicated and confusing that even experienced practitioners of industrial relations are at a loss to understand them.

In the realm of disciplinary procedure, various acts of omission and commission by a worker, including misconduct, have been unnecessarily labelled 'gross misconduct'. The most frequently committed acts of willful insubordination, actions subversive to discipline and habitually showing up late for work, have been deleted from the list of misconduct. A worker accused of misconduct has been allowed two weeks to submit his explanation, instead of the decades-old practice of three days.

At present, the role of an inquiry officer conducting a domestic inquiry into the charge of misconduct is confined to recording statements of the accused, prosecution and defence witnesses, and their cross examination. Besides, he has to ensure that the accused is not put under any pressure by the management and that the inquiry proceedings are fair. Under the SLC, the officer will again communicate the charges to the accused employee and ask him to submit a written defence within seven days. The system of hiring third-party workers has been there since the inception of industry in Pakistan. Its rationalisation by SLC has been opposed by labour federations, who say the Code should have been formalised through prior consultation with a tripartite commission.

Consolidation and simplification should be based on the contents and scope of existing labour laws. Nevertheless, provisions which have become redundant should be deleted and the maintenance of registers and other manual record keeping should be automated. The key labour laws have evolved since the British era. Their sudden replacement with differently intended and worded laws will not only jeopardise industrial functioning but also make implementation difficult. - Courtesy Dawn

Ifthikhar Malik says:

Pakistan can earn billions by tapping mineral wealth

LAHORE (APP): SAARC Chamber of Commerce and Industry former President, Ifthikhar Ali Malik has said Pakistan can comfortably fetch billions of dollars foreign exchange by fully exploiting its minerals wealth estimated at $6 trillion dollars.

Talking to delegation of industrialists led by Taimoor Ali, here on Tuesday, he said this immense wealth, if effectively harnessed, has the potential to transform the country's economic landscape. Currently, Pakistan's mining sector is underdeveloped, contributing only a small fraction to the national GDP. To unlock this potential, several strategic measures need to be implemented.

He said investment in geological surveys and exploration activities was crucial. Comprehensive mapping of mineral resources can attract both domestic and international investors. Pakistan can benefit from collaborations with countries that have advanced mining technologies and expertise, such as Australia and Canada. By creating a favorable investment climate, the government can encourage multinational companies to invest in the exploration and extraction of minerals, he added.

He said developing infrastructure was vital for the mining sector's growth. Efficient transportation networks, including roads and railways, are necessary to transport minerals from remote mining sites to processing facilities and export hubs. Investing in power generation and distribution infrastructure was also crucial, as mining operations are energy-intensive. Public-private partnerships can play a significant role in developing this infrastructure.

Ifthikhar Ali Malik said building a skilled workforce was essential. Establishing training centers and vocational institutes focused on mining-related skills can equip the local population with the necessary expertise. This not only creates job opportunities but also reduces dependency on foreign labor. He said the government must ensure that the benefits of mining are equitably distributed.

Revenue generated from mining should be reinvested in local communities, improving healthcare, education and overall living standards. By adopting these strategies, Pakistan can fully exploit its mineral wealth, driving economic growth and improving the livelihoods of its citizens. Leader of the delegation Taimoor Malik was of the view that regulatory reforms are essential.

Technology crucial for Pakistan's sustainable growth: PFC CEO

LAHORE (APP): Pakistan Furniture Council (PFC) Chief Executive Officer, Mian Kashif Ashfaq has said that technology for development was an urgent need for Pakistan to address its multifaceted challenges and pave the way for sustainable growth. Talking to overseas Pakistani investors delegation led by Sheryar Khan Investment Consular to Milano Italy, here on Tuesday, he said Pakistan faces significant hurdles in education, healthcare, agriculture sectors and governance. Leveraging technology can transform these sectors, enhancing efficiency, accessibility and quality of services.

He said the integration of renewable energy technologies can also address Pakistan's chronic energy shortages and reduce its reliance on fossil fuels. Investment in solar, wind, and hydropower can ensure a sustainable and environmentally friendly energy supply. He said the urgent need for technology in Pakistan spans various sectors, offering solutions to pressing issues and opportunities for development. By embracing technological advancements, Pakistan can drive economic growth, improve the quality of life for its citizens, and secure a sustainable future. He said governance and public service delivery can also be significantly improved through technology. E-governance initiatives can increase transparency, reduce corruption, and streamline administrative processes. Digital platforms for citizen engagement can foster a more inclusive and participatory governance model.

Mian Kashif Ashfaq said agriculture, a backbone of Pakistan's economy, can benefit immensely from technology.

Dow ends at record as luxury share weakness hits European bourses

NEW YORK (AFP/APP): The Dow finished at a record Monday as markets weighed the impact of the failed assassination attempt on Donald Trump, while European bourses came under pressure from weakness in the luxury sector and disappointing Chinese economic data.

The blue-chip index piled on 0.5 percent to finish at 40,211.72, notching its first record since mid-May.

Major US indices were in positive territory the entire session amid talk that the assassination attempt boosted Trump's prospects in the election. Trump was hit in the ear but not seriously injured in a gun attack during a campaign event on Saturday in Pennsylvania ahead of the Republican National Convention in Wisconsin. The former president announced Monday that Ohio Senator J.D. Vance will be his vice presidential nominee.

"The connection for the market is that former President Trump is seen by many to be a more market-friendly candidate due in part to his push for deregulation and a lower corporate tax rate," O'Hare said. "Still, others worry that his push to increase tariffs could also lead to higher inflation."

Handicraft industry - preserving centuries old asset

PESHAWAR (APP): In the heart of South Asia lies Peshawar, a city with stories spanning over past 2,500 years and an inimitable destination of domestic and foreign artisans bringing in marvelous and eye-catching crafts designs.

Rich in different traditional and cultural values this city boast of a tapestry of different dynasties and civilizations, most vibrant among them the handicrafts introduced by local and foreign artisans of pre-Greek, Mughals and colonial era.

Aptly named as "Peshawar" or "the City of Artisans," Peshawar still carries the legacy of craftsmanship passed down generation after generation with city bazaars like Misgran, Ratti bazaar, Dabgari Gardens and the legendary Qissa Khawani Bazaar, still echoing past glory of artisans.

"Walking through these markets is like stepping back in time. The air is filled with metal clinking, the scent of wood and steel shavings and curving and sight of meticulously crafted items," said a Senior Research Officer, Archeology and Museums Department Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Bakhtzada Khan.

"The shops brimming with wood and metal cutlery capture the attention of visitors as despite rapid technological advancements, these ancient bazaars maintain a steadfast appeal, especially among rural people of KP and Punjab provinces," he stated.

Bakhtzada said the discovery of human remains in Soan Valley in Punjab was evidence of stone-made cutlery and bone tools used anciently. "It was found that people started making clay and stone pots, crockery and other related utensils during the Neolithic period commonly known as new Stone Age dating back some 8,000 years back."

The wooden cutlery shops in Peshawar bazaars, in particular, are a visual feast, displaying an array of handmade items—wooden spoons, blenders, kneading plates, curd mixers and bowls—showcasing artisans' dedication and hard work. These products, though presenting an old-fashioned look, also possess a timeless quality and unique designs.

"Wooden cutlery is still alive in Peshawar. We have valuable customers for whom we specially produce these items," said Qaiser Khan, a shopkeeper in main Dabgari Bazaar. "Majority of our customers belong to KPK and Punjab while our cutlery is also preferred in Afghanistan, Middle East and Central Asians Republics due to its durability and unique designs." However, he complained of the lukewarm response of urban population who consider these products as obsolete and outdated and shifted to stainless steel cutlery and porcelain crockery.

Faraz Ali, another shopkeeper at Misgran bazaar said use of wooden cutlery had declined in recent decades and the KPK government should take steps to preserve this asset. "Wooden utensils are mostly cheaper than stainless steel or aluminum. Moreover, many people think that meals cooked in clay pottery with the help of a wooden spoon are better in taste."

If seen in the hygiene perspective, the wood cutlery and clay pots are not that harmful as those prepared by using certain chemical components.

"Wood products are not harmful for using domestically. However, mixing of some chemical ingredients in preparation of utensils from different metals can affect human health," said Dr Riaz Khan, Principal Medical Officer, Pabbi hospital.

Israel hits Gaza from land, sea and air as Hamas pulls out of truce talks

Monitoring Desk
GAZA: Israel struck the southern and central Gaza Strip on Monday and carried out raids that killed "a number of" militants, the Israeli military said, as hopes faded for a truce and hostage release deal being secured any time soon. Hamas announced on Sunday it was pulling out of truce talks after an Israeli strike targeting the head of the group's military wing, Mohammed Deif, killed scores of Palestinians.

Israel hammered the Gaza Strip from the air, sea and land Monday as the war in the Palestinian territory showed no sign of abating, with Hamas saying it was pulling out of truce talks.

Shells rained down on the neighbourhoods of Tal Al-Hawa, Sheikh Ajlin and Al-Sabra in Gaza City, AFP correspondents reported, while eyewitnesses said the Israeli army had shelled the Al-Mughraqa area and the northern outskirts of the Nuseirat refugee camp in central Gaza.

Paramedics from the Palestinian Red Crescent said they had retrieved the bodies of five people, including three children, after Israeli air strikes in the Al-Maghazi camp, also in the central Gaza Strip.

Meanwhile, eyewitnesses reported Israeli gunship fire east of Khan Younis, in southern Gaza, and shelling and Apache helicopter attacks in western areas of the southern-most city of Rafah.

The Israeli military said in a statement that it was continuing its activity throughout the coastal territory, and said it had conducted raids in Rafah and central Gaza that killed "a number of" militants, as well as air strikes throughout the strip over the past day.

Trump steps into Republican convention spotlight after surviving shooting

Monitoring Desk
WASHINGTON: Donald Trump made a triumphant entrance to cap the first day of the Republican National Convention, receiving a raucous ovation from the party faithful days after surviving an assassination attempt that has reshaped the US presidential contest.

The former president walked into the Fiserv Forum in downtown Milwaukee to an uproarious response, his car heavily bandaged from having been grazed by a bullet, hours after he was officially nominated to be the party's 2024 standard-bearer.

"Fight! Fight! Fight!" the crowd chanted while pumping their fists, a reference to Trump's response in the moments after he was shot. Uncharacteristically subdued, Trump waved from a box where he sat alongside his newly anointed running mate, US Senator JD Vance.

The attack at a Trump rally in Pennsylvania on Saturday, which killed a supporter, underscored the nation's deeply fractured political landscape ahead of the November 5 election between Trump and Democratic President Joe Biden.

No surprises expected as Syrians vote in parliamentary poll

Monitoring Desk
DAMASCUS: Syrians in government-held areas were voting Monday in their fourth parliamentary election since civil war erupted in 2011, a poll expected to keep President Bashar al-Assad's ruling Baath party in power. The election came amid overtures from Ankara towards Damascus, after ties were severed following the start of Syria's war in 2011, with Assad saying he was open to meeting Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan depending on the encounter's "content".

President Joe Biden says it was a 'mistake' to say he wanted to put a 'bull's-eye' on Donald Trump

Monitoring Desk
WASHINGTON: President Joe Biden told NBC News in an interview Monday that it was a "mistake" to say he wanted to put a "bull's-eye" on Republican nominee Donald Trump, but argued that the rhetoric from his opponent was more incendiary while warning that Trump remained a threat to democratic institutions.

The remark in question came during a private call with donors last week as Biden had been scrambling to shore up his imperiled candidacy with key party constituencies.

During that conversation, Biden declared he was "done" talking about his poor debate performance and said it was "time to put Trump in the bull's-eye," saying Trump has gotten far too little scrutiny on his stances, rhetoric and lack of campaigning.

Heavy rains kill 35 in eastern Afghanistan

Monitoring Desk
KABUL: At least 35 people were killed and 230 injured on Monday after heavy rain in eastern Afghanistan, a local official said.

"On Monday evening, rain caused by thunderstorms killed 35 people and injured 230 others in Jalalabad and certain districts of Nangarhar" province, Quraishi Badloon, head of the department of information and culture, said.

The casualties were caused by heavy storms and rains that collapsed trees, walls and roofs of people's houses, Badloon said. "There is a possibility that casualties might rise," he went on, adding that the wounded as well as victims' bodies were brought to Nangarhar regional hospital and Fatimatul-Zahra hospital.

Images shared by Badloon's department showed medical personnel wearing white and blue uniforms giving treatment to the wounded. "We share the grief of the families of the victims," said Zabiullah Mujahid, a spokesman for the Taliban government.

"The relevant institutions of the Islamic Emirate have been directed to go to the affected areas as soon as possible," Mujahid wrote on X, adding they would provide shelter, food and medicine to displaced families.

The tragedy comes after flash floods killed hundreds of people in Afghanistan in May and swamped agricultural lands in the country, where 80 per cent of the population depends on farming to survive.

Among the poorest countries in the world, Afghanistan is particularly exposed to the effects of climate change. This year, it saw an unusually wet spring after an extremely dry winter.

Ukraine needs 25 Patriot air defense systems and more F-16 warplanes, President Zelenskyy says

Monitoring Desk
KYIV: Ukraine needs 25 Patriot air defense systems to fully defend its airspace and protect the entire country from Russian missile attacks, President Volodymyr Zelenskyy said Monday, adding that he also wants Western partners to send more F-16 warplanes than those already pledged. In his first news conference since returning from a trip to the United States, Zelenskyy said he is ready to work with Donald Trump if he wins November's election. "I am not afraid" of that prospect, Zelenskyy said, adding he is convinced that most Republicans support Ukraine in its war with Russia.

Zelenskyy said on Sunday he was "appalled" by the attempt to assassinate Trump and wished him a speedy recovery.

Western support is crucial for Ukraine as it tries to beat back Russia's bigger and better-equipped invading army. Zelenskyy has proved talented at persuading friendly countries to provide ever more support, even if he doesn't always get what he wants immediately. A six-month delay in military assistance from the U.S., the biggest single contributor to Ukraine, meant that Kyiv's forces "lost the initiative" on the front line, Zelenskyy said.

Since the U.S. aid resumed in April, Ukraine has been scrambling to block a Russian offensive in eastern areas. Zelenskyy didn't say how many Patriot systems Ukraine currently possesses, though it is far fewer than the 25 he says his country needs as Russia has battered the national power grid. The U.S. and other NATO allies promised last week to provide Ukraine with dozens of air defense systems in the coming months.

Delhi lawyers go on strike over criminal law overhaul

Monitoring Desk
NEW DELHI: Thousands of lawyers in India's capital protested on Monday against an overhaul in criminal legislation by staying away from work and boycotting court hearings, as opposition mounted to the changes. Many have been angered by new laws that came in on July 1 expanding police powers to keep people in pre-trial detention and requiring judges to issue written rulings within 45 days of the end of a trial.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi's government has defended the changes — which also include the death sentence for gang rape of women under 18 — saying they are "victim-centric", modernise the system and "end the endless wait for justice".

IMF programme to boost Pakistan external financing: Moody's

NEW YORK (INP): Moody's – one of the top international rating agencies – has said the new deal reached with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) will improve the chances of obtaining finances for Pakistan while providing reliable sources for the purpose both friendly nations and international financial institutions.

In a latest report on Pakistan's economy, Moody's at the same time has feared that persistent Pakistan inflation may lead to social unrest and tensions. Higher taxes and future energy tariff adjustments could hamper economic reforms in the country, it added.

On the other hand, Moody's is also of the view that lack of electoral mandate is also a threat to effective and sustained implementation of economic reforms – a clear reference to the coalition government led by PML-N's Shehbaz Sharif.

Weak governance and social tensions could impact the government's ability to go ahead with economic reforms, Moody's said.

Moody's report coincides with the latest increase in fuel prices announced on Monday after the government went for electricity basic tariff hike to please the IMF by meeting one of the basic conditions for approving a bailout package.

Earlier, the government presented a budget which saw a massive hike in income tax for salaried classes and imposition of GST on items like milk, thus propelling the food prices further in country where an overwhelming majority is dealing with an unprecedented cost of living crisis.

The latest comments came after Islamabad secured a staff-level agreement for a $7 billion deal covering a 37-month period, which is subjected to a final approval by the IMF Executive Board.

About foreign reserves, it says the current $9.4bn level isn't enough to meet the needs, as Pakistan requires around $21bn in 2024-25 and $23bn in 2025-26 through external financing.

Hence, Moody's says Pakistan is an alarming position with reference to external debt and the next three to five years would be very tough for policy making and execution.
