No one can claim to be Muslim without unconditional faith in Khatam-e-Nabuwat: SC

ISLAMABAD (APP): The Supreme Court of Pakistan in a decision on a criminal review petition No.2/2024 stated that no one can claim to be Muslim until he/she has unconditional faith in 'Khatam-e-Nabuwat' of Prophet Muhammad Peace Be Upon Him (PBUH). It said that the court has clearly stated in the verdict that the both group, which called themselves Ahmadi, are non-Muslims in accordance with Sharia, Constitution and the law. These groups have no right to spread their beliefs in Muslims at public or private forums. The court has clarified this point while accepting the appeal of the Punjab government, it said. A press release issued by the top court said that the decision in the criminal review petition was announced on July 24, and it was written in Urdu language so general public can easily understand it. It said that the top court has sought guidance from authentic educational institutions and except this, other individuals were also given opportunity to submit written arguments during hearing. The apex court also viewed the proceeding of Parliamentary Committee and took guidelines from on record statements of committee members including Mufi Mehmood, Maulana Zafar Ahmed Ansari, Maulana Abdul Haq, Maulana Shah Ahmed Norani, Maulana Abdul Mustafa Azhari, Maulana Syed Muhammad Ali Rizvi, Maulana Saddam Al-Shaheed, Maulana Nematullah, Professor Ghafoor Ahmed and other scholars. Except this, the writings of Syed Abul Ala Modoodi and others scholars are also viewed, which has been mentioned in the order. The press release said that the decision has also been in line with the previous judgments of Supreme Court and Federal Shariat Court (FSC). It said that the Constitution gives the right of freedom of expression to the citizens but it cannot be used against immensity of Islam or for damaging the integrity of the country.

Judicial constraints

There is little wrong with the proposal in principle, even if the timing raises some concerns. During a Wednesday session, the Senate Standing Committee on Law and Justice agreed on the need to increase the number of Supreme Court judges, citing the growing pendency of cases before the apex court.

The law minister suggested that the backlog has grown because judges ignore timelines as they are not accountable for their performance; the committee chair, however, held that the Supreme Court is simply receiving more cases because the number of high court judges has increased, which has sped up the resolution of cases at the lower level, leading to more appeals landing before the apex court. A legislative bill on the matter has been deferred till the committee members can see 'empirical evidence' to support their decision, but the committee agrees that the number of judges could be increased at any time through simple legislation.

While the number of cases piling up at the Supreme Court does support the suggestion for inducting more judges, it would have been better if the proposal had come from the judiciary itself. The fact that it is being prescribed by the legislature will be questioned, given the political context. In too many instances, the current government has attempted to bypass challenges to its rule with tailored legislation.

Accountability laws, election laws, laws governing the armed forces and intelligence services, laws affecting the functioning of the judiciary and even laws directly affecting fundamental rights have been tinkered with and changed in the past two years to align with the ruling class's priorities, often without taking opposition opinions into account. At the same time, key government leaders have taken highly confrontational positions against the judiciary every time a decision has gone against them. The reaction to the recent reserved seats case is a case in point.

This creates doubts regarding the government's intent. Observers will ask why the authorities are suddenly worried about how many judges there are in the Supreme Court. Does it have something to do with how the bench ruled in the reserved seats case? Some critics will see this as another attempt to pack the court, given how the appointment of ad hoc judges triggered a similar controversy. These are serious questions that the government will not be able to avoid.

Of course, the Judicial Commission of Pakistan will thoroughly vet all new entrants to the Supreme Court, but perhaps it would be best if new inductees are initially tasked with solely clearing the backlog, instead of being assigned to major cases. This would forestall most of the objections that could be raised. Lastly, the judiciary, too, must be invited to give its input on this proposal.

An unsafe country

Zubeida Mustafa

How safe a place is Pakistan for young women? According to the human rights ministry, in the last three years, 63,000 cases of violence against women were reported here. This is a rough estimate as not every case of violence is brought to public notice. In fact, it is just the tip of the iceberg.

A fuller picture of the state of human security in Pakistan emerges from the Trafficking in Persons Report issued annually since 2001 by the US State Department. The 2024 report was released recently. From this document, one learns of the complexity and severity of the problems created by criminal trafficking in Pakistan.

Fundamentally, trafficking violates a victim's constitutional rights to freedom and to live with dignity in a place of her/his choice. The trafficker's basic motive is monetary gain. In today's age of neo-liberalism, trafficking has emerged as a global crime involving a transnational mafia conducting a multibillion-dollar trade reminiscent of the slave trade of yore.

Unfortunately, Pakistan as a source, transit and destination country occupies a strategic position in this heinous business. Its inability — or is it unwillingness? — to check unscrupulous elements sustains the mafia that keeps this sordid trade going. It is a lucrative source of illegal earnings for the psychopaths. As for the mass majority, poverty, gender inequality and illiteracy are the factors that make them so vulnerable.

For unexplained reasons, not many voices have been raised against this crime against humanity. The numbers affected should jolt our conscience. According to a modest estimate, nearly 20,000 persons (80 per cent of them women) are trafficked in Pakistan every year. TIP reports from 2017 to 2021 had showed figures rising from 12,000 to 32,000. In 2022, when a kidnapped girl was recovered in Lahore and taken to court, the police spoke of 40,500 girls having been abducted in Punjab alone. For me, even one woman trafficked is one too many.

It is difficult to understand why state and society accept with equanimity a social evil with profound implications for a country that claims to be an Islamic entity, and which impacts our economy, moral fibre and national image.

The latest TIP Report confirms this trend. It informs us that in the investigating period (2023), the government probed 18,461 cases of which 15,022 were of sex trafficking and 3,439 of forced labour. Of these, only 6,178 were prosecuted, with a measly 10 convictions. The 2023 report had revealed a similar pattern of high numbers being investigated, followed by a drop in the number of prosecutions and a scanty lot being convicted. The punishment meted out is not disclosed. It would not be surprising if no one is imprisoned and a fine of only a few hundred thousand is imposed.

How has the government reacted to this annual finger-pointing exercise by Washington? One response was to neutralise the pressure by setting up the National Commission on Human Rights in 2015, which has the mandate to address suo motu cases of human rights violations, create public awareness and conduct research on human rights matters. It also makes recommendations to the government on related issues. Consequently, Pakistan has amended existing laws and adopted new ones, the most important being the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act, 2018.

The same year, the NCHR published the report The Menace of Trafficking/Smuggling: Pakistan's Response to the Problem. Well documented, it focuses on the problem in its local setting. The law and order machinery dealing with trafficking problems has also been restructured, with the FIA being assigned to see to the international aspects of trafficking.

The creation of the NCHR notwithstanding, the situation vis-à-vis trafficking in Pakistan continues to be horrendous. No one in official circles talks about it. Hence it is left to the TIPReport to expose the truth.

Year after year, TIP reports have reiterated that Pakistan does not meet the minimum standards in several key areas. Inadequacy, inefficiency and shoddiness in investigation is something we are all familiar with. I have experienced it whenever I have had to deal with the police.

What leaves one aghast is the charge of the government being hand in glove with the criminals. TIP 2024 states: "For the fifth year, the government did not take adequate action against credible reports of official complicity in trafficking crimes, which also continued to create a culture of impunity and inhibited anti-trafficking efforts. In Sindh, local officials continued to perpetrate bonded labour with impunity in brick kilns and on farms." In Pakistan, money can buy a criminal his acquittal and traffickers are multimillionaires. If they also enjoy the blessings of the powers that be then what do they have to worry about? — Courtesy Dawn

Mosquito attack

Naseem Salahuddin

A distressed colleague called me about what started out as an acute fever, but which progressed, within days, to pain in all the muscles. He was troubled with pain and swelling of almost all the joints of his hands, shoulders, wrists, knees, feet, and back, to the extent that he was unable to get out of bed because of severe, constant pain, "as though somebody had pummelled my body with sticks and stones". He took analgesics and plenty of fluid and rested in bed, hoping that the awful symptoms would go away, but they continued, week after week. One month into the episode, he could barely sit in a chair or hobble to the bathroom.

This bizarre syndrome is caused by the Chikungunya virus (CHIKV), spread by the same mosquito species called Aedes aegypti, which transmits several other viruses. In 2016 in Pakistan, there was an outbreak of chikungunya when many patients presented with fever, rash, and pain in the muscles and joints; most people recovered quickly to their original state of health, while others suffered the pain for several weeks but ultimately recovered. Chikungunya has made a comeback, but since most viral infections appear alike, it is difficult to diagnose or make a prognosis. In the case of my colleague, the disease was exceptionally severe and protracted, requiring heavy doses of analgesics and even steroids to provide relief.

Dengue hit the news in 2005 when thousands of people of all ages presented with sudden fever and pain in the back and legs. When their blood was tested, physicians were amazed to find platelets that dropped below average and then scaled back to pre-infection levels over a week or two. Very few progressed to bleeding or shock or required intensive care and platelet transfusions.

We now know four dengue viruses belonging to subgroups (serotypes) 1, 2, 3, and 4. Surprising information evolved: if one has had dengue 1 in the past and later gets dengue with a different serotype, the body's immune system goes into overdrive, and the outcome can be severe. Over the years, more people are getting infected with other serotypes and suffer more complications, often requiring hospitalisation and blood or platelet transfusions.

In 2015, an unsettling problem was reported in Brazil: many women were delivering babies with small heads (microcephaly). Their blood tests revealed the presence of a virus called 'Zika'. This was alarming and traced to the mosquito species responsible for carrying the dengue and chikungunya viruses. Zika also presents with fever, headache, body pain, a rash, and red eyes. Most people would not be diagnosed without lab tests since it is not clinically distinguishable, and most recover without complications. However, if a pregnant woman gets Zika, the newborn is likely to be born with a small head (microcephaly), brain defects, or other malformations, and the mother suffers complications of pregnancy.

In Pakistan, lab tests have identified a few patients with Zika; it is not known to what extent it is prevalent at this time, but given the ubiquity of the Aedes mosquito, rapid air travel, and global warming, it would be no surprise if Zika, too, rears its head. Pakistan, with a high burden of mosquitoes, coupled with an exceptionally high birth rate, will be significantly affected by children born with congenital defects.

While chikungunya, dengue and Zika all present with similar symptoms, only blood tests reveal the true nature of the infection. Treatment for all three remains supportive with fluids, temperature control, and rest. If complications ensue, they should be managed by experienced physicians.

Clouds of mosquitoes buzz overhead, but only the bite of a female mosquito is responsible for these infections. The male lives only to procreate. The long-legged, black-and-white striped creature looks for its prey at sundown; its sharp lance pierces the skin to inject virus-laden secretions and sucks up blood. If the victim's blood contains the virus, the mosquito reinjects it into the next victim. The deed accomplished, the female flies to find a clean haven of water, lay eggs that hatch over a week or more, and restart the cycle of life. The hardy eggs can survive dryness, humidity, and extremes of temperature.

As our population carries the burden of numerous other infectious diseases, these viruses add another bane to the health of our hapless citizens. Citizens must protect themselves against mosquitoes, but environmental cleanliness alone can save us from these and many other public health diseases. Once again, our misgovernance is responsible for the profusion of such nasty flying creatures. — Courtesy Dawn

Karachi loses protected mangroves for housing schemes, development projects

ISLAMABAD (APP): Amidst Karachi's growing concrete jungle, mangrove forests which protect the city's coastline against cyclones, strong winds, coastal flooding or other climate change induced disasters, face serious threat of destruction.

A recent report by WWF-Pakistan has identified several locations along the Karachi coast where significant tracts of mangroves have been cleared for housing schemes and commercial and industrial projects. The report also highlighted areas where mangrove landscapes were still under threat of massive deforestation.

It proposed that to stop mangrove destruction along the coastline of Karachi, it is essential to implement strict enforcement of laws and encourage reforestation and natural regeneration programmes. It warned that if preventive measures are not taken in time, existing mangrove areas could potentially be removed or destroyed in the near future.

Using Earth Observation Satellites, Remote Sensing and GIS tools, geospatial experts at the Richard Garstang Conservation Lab at WWF-Pakistan recorded data on mangrove cover in Karachi over the last two decades. They found that land reclamation and cutting of mangroves for housing schemes and development projects have resulted in the rapid decline of mangrove cover in Karachi.

Based on this report, WWF-Pakistan emphasized the need to prevent the further destruction of mangroves along Karachi's coastline through better planning, effective implementation strategies, and coordinated actions by relevant organizations and departments.

The Sindh Forest Department (SFD) has been making significant progress in the conservation and management of the mangrove forests in the province. The department planted mangroves on 55,555 hectares along the Sindh coastline, mainly in the Indus Delta, through their ambitious projects between 2020 and 2024.

They also initiated various mangrove reforestation and management programmes in collaboration with WWF-Pakistan and the International Union for Conservation of Nature Pakistan (IUCN). As a result of these efforts, Pakistan's mangrove forest cover has increased from 1,338.16 km2 in 2016 to 1,573.57 km2 in 2020 [REDD+; Subnational GHG Inventory 2022].

Despite these efforts by the department and mangrove plantation drives by conservation organizations, Pakistan Navy and local communities dwelling in the coastal belt, mangroves are facing significant threats in Karachi. According to the SFD, approximately 200 hectares of mangrove forests along Karachi's coastline were lost between 2010 and 2022. This concerning trend is predominantly driven by land grabbing, residential schemes and development projects.

Trump discusses US wiping Iran 'off the face of the Earth'

WASHINGTON: Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump on Thursday invoked the annihilation of US adversary Iran in a social media post reminiscent of his most incendiary outbursts while in the White House.

"If they do 'assassinate' President Trump, which is always a possibility, I hope that America obliterates Iran, wipes it off the face of the Earth — If that does not happen, American Leaders will be considered 'gutless cowards!' he wrote on his social media platform, Truth Social.

Trump made the remarks alongside a brief video of Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu bringing up alleged Iranian plots against Trump in his address to the US Congress on Wednesday.

US media reported last week that the US Secret Service had increased security for Trump weeks ago after authorities learned of an Iranian plot to kill him, although it was not linked to the recent attempt on his life in which a 20-year-old American fired shots during a campaign rally.

CNN reported that US authorities received intelligence from a "human source" on a plan by Tehran targeting the former president, causing protection to be boosted for Trump. Other US outlets also reported the plot.

But it was not connected to the campaign shooting in Butler, Pennsylvania, in which gunman Thomas Matthew Crooks opened fire, lightly wounding Trump and killing a rally attendee, they said.

Relations between Washington and Iran have long been strained and reached a breaking point as Tehran sought revenge for the 2020 killing of Revolutionary Guard commander Qasem Soleimani, ordered by Trump when he was president.

The US National Security Council said it had been "tracking Iranian threats against former Trump administration officials for years."

France's high-speed railway hit by 'sabotage' during Olympics

PARIS: France's high-speed rail network was hit by "malicious acts" including arson attacks that have disrupted the transport system, train operator SNCF said on Friday, hours before the opening ceremony of the Paris Olympics.

A source close to the investigation told AFP that the attacks were coordinated acts of "sabotage". "This is a massive attack on a large scale to paralyse the TGV network," SNCF told AFP, adding that many routes will have to be cancelled.

"SNCF was the victim of several simultaneous malicious acts overnight," the national train operator said, adding that the attacks affected its Atlantic, northern and eastern lines.

"Arson attacks were started to damage our faci-ties," it said, adding that traffic on the affected lines was "heavily disrupted" and the situation would last through the weekend as repairs are conducted.

Trains were being diverted to different tracks "but we will have to cancel a large number of them", the statement said. The southeastern line was not affected as "a malicious act was foiled".

SNCF urged passengers to postpone their trips and stay away from train stations.

French Prime Minister Gabriel Attal said that security forces are hunting the suspects behind the arson attacks that hobbled the country's high-speed rail network.

"Our intelligence services and law enforcement are mobilised to find and punish the perpetrators of these criminal acts."

Netanyahu, Biden meet for tense ceasefire talks

WASHINGTON: Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said on Thursday he was ready to work with Joe Biden for the rest of his presidency, as the two leaders met for the first time at the White House for talks on a Gaza ceasefire.

"I want to thank you for the 50 years of public service and 50 years of support for the state of Israel," Netanyahu said after they shook hands in the historic setting of the Oval Office.

"And I look forward to discussing with you today and working with you in the months ahead," Biden stunned the world on Sunday when he announced that he was bowing out of the US presidential election, with Vice President Kamala Harris now set to be the Democratic Party's candidate.

Relations between Biden and Netanyahu are tense over Israel's conduct in their campaign.

They have met just three times during his presidency, once in September last year in New York, and then when Biden travelled to Israel after the attacks and hugged Netanyahu at the airport tarmac at Tel Aviv.

The meetings come after Netanyahu vowed "total victory" against Hamas in a fiery speech Wednesday to the US Congress. The White House was surrounded by metal barriers and a heavy police presence, after rowdy protests broke out near the Capitol following Netanyahu's speech. Harris on Thursday condemned the "despicable" and "unpatriotic" burning of an American flag by protesters, after attacks by Donald Trump's Republicans to paint Democrats as pro-Hamas.

US vice president says she 'will not be silent' in face of Gaza suffering

WASHINGTON: US Vice President Kamala Harris said on Thursday that she expressed concern about the situation in the Gaza Strip to Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu during their meeting at the White House.

"I made clear my serious concern about the dire humanitarian situation there, with over 2 million people facing high levels of food insecurity and half a million people facing catastrophic levels of acute food insecurity," Harris told reporters after the closed-door meeting with Netanyahu.

The meeting came a day after Netanyahu addressed a joint session of the US Congress, where he claimed that the conflict in Gaza has "one of the lowest ratios of combatants to non-combatant casualties in the history of urban warfare". Harris said that what has happened in Gaza over the past nine months was "devastating".

"The images of dead children and desperate, hungry people fleeing for safety, sometimes displaced for the second, third, or fourth time.

"We cannot look away in the face of these tragedies. We cannot allow ourselves to become numb to the suffering. And I will not be silent," she added.

Earlier, Netanyahu met with US President Joe Biden, who ended his presidential re-election campaign on Sunday and endorsed Harris to replace him as the Democratic presidential candidate.

With her remarks, Harris reflected a major shift in Gaza policy, while urging Netanyahu to reach a ceasefire in the besieged enclave.
