tor faced serious threats from the disease as a huge number of patients put a serious burden on the healthcare system.

President Zardari warned that any failure to take timely steps could multiply the hepatitis cases in the country, therefore decisive measures to protect the citizens' health were inevitable.

He called for public awareness on promoting precautionary measures to ensure prevention, large-scale screening and testing, besides highlighting the significance of treatment and increasing the number of facilities.

Modi's jingoism

Any hopes of a thaw in Pakistan-India relations should swiftly be put to rest after Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi's problematic comments in the disputed Ladakh region.

Addressing an event to mark the anniversary of the Kargil war on Friday, Mr Modi used the occasion to lambast Pakistan, trotting out the tired old trope of 'terrorism' in an attempt to burnish his nationalistic credentials. If such words had been used on the campaign trail, it would have been unfortunate yet understandable.

But the Indian leader's eagerness to indulge in Pakistan-bashing so early into his third term can only be construed as the ruling BJP's aversion to the idea of establishing better ties with this country. The Indian prime minister accused Pakistan of trying to stay relevant through "terrorism" and "proxy war". He said that Pakistan had "not learnt any lessons" from the past, while adding boasts and threats aimed at this country.

Perhaps the direct trigger for Mr Modi's undiplomatic and highly inflammatory outburst is the situation in occupied Kashmir, where there have been a number of recent attacks targeting Indian forces. According to one tally, at least 12 Indian soldiers have been killed in the occupied region this year so far.

However, India has no one to blame but itself for unrest in the disputed territory. India has claimed that its controversial step of stripping held Kashmir of its special constitutional status five years ago has brought peace and development to the region. If that is the case, why does India maintain over 100,000 troops in this geographically small region? The fact is that, instead of carrying forward the tripartite dialogue involving Pakistan and the Kashmiris to peacefully resolve the Kashmir question, the Modi dispensation has sought to unilaterally change 'facts on the ground', even though the region continues to be seen as a disputed territory as per international consensus.

Responding to India's tirade, the Foreign Office has said that while Pakistan is ready to defend itself, "it remains committed to promoting peace" in the region. Practically, this means that the deep freeze in relations that took hold in August 2019 will continue until India decides to approach Pakistan with respect and the desire to make peace. Sabre-rattling aside, India should avoid any misadventures, as Pakistan can and will defend itself. When New Delhi feels that it is ready for peace, it is welcome to call Islamabad.

The blueprint for peace already exists, whether in the shape of confidence-building measures, or the Musharraf-era scheme for a resolution to the Kashmir dispute. All these measures can be discussed and fine-tuned, leading to a just resolution. But first, Delhi must stop demonising Pakistan, and show a willingness for peace.

Beat the rich

Muna Khan

A small part of me agrees with actor Noman Ijaz who took to Instagram to slam critics of Anant Ambani's wedding. The family spent their own money so they should be allowed to enjoy it as they wish, he wrote. I thought this at first, as I eye-rolled my way through images of the pre-wedding in March but then cringed at the pure spectacle on display last month. I disagree with Ijaz when he said "you should pray you have that kind of money for that kind of wedding".

Err... I think going beyond one's means when planning a wedding continues to be a cause of so many problems in the subcontinent. The poor go into debt; the rich go berserk.

I think the word 'shaadi' meaning both wedding and marriage is another problem because they are not the same thing. There is an entire industry in Pakistan propped up to prepare the rich and the wannabe rich for a wedding — choreographers, make-up artists for the bride and groom's parties, photographers, video filmmakers who then release slickly edited films on social media. The focus has become on getting the right shot(s) for Instagram, and now includes invitations telling guests what colours to wear for which events.

Ijaz was not commenting on this part of the industry. He was responding to actor Arsalan Naseer who poked fun at how relationships do not last as long as this Ambani wedding. This was one of the kinder comments about an event, which by the way, is still going on. After an engagement party in January, a pre-wedding celebration in March where Rihanna performed for $5 million, a European cruise in Italy in May, a masquerade ball also in May in France, then back to Italy for an evening event where Andrea Bocelli performed, and the actual wedding in Mumbai, there's something happening in London, probably now.

It is Ambani's choice to put up a rather gross display of wealth but let's not forget how he got here — reportedly getting contracts, resources and protected land for a pittance and by cosying up to politicians to get loans waived off. He has exploited the system but people in power love that he makes India look good because he brings the big bucks.

This wedding was less a celebration of love and more a show of power and clout. I understand a shaadi is about two families more than the individuals. It's probably why we call it an arranged marriage, compared to love marriage which translates to families getting no benefits.

Everyone knows Ambani spent $600m at this wedding but I'm curious to hear what he — and India plus its billionaires — will earn as a result of this wedding.

If the Jamnagar airport was declared an international one in March to accommodate guests like Mark Zuckerberg and Bill Gates, think of what else will open up for tycoons.

An Oxfam report last year said India's richest one per cent owned 40pc of the country's wealth. I was horrified to read an article in Time magazine which reported "that the gap between India's rich and poor is now so wide that by some measures, there was more equality in India under British colorial rule than today", and dubbed it a "Billionaire Raj".

Indians spent $75 billion last year in the luxury wedding market, according to LiveMint which estimated it could grow between 7pc to 8pc annually.

The message is clear: spend big, reap big — whether it's financial or social capital or pushing forward how great India is.

Lest we get ahead of ourselves and think 'this is not us' let me add: I have seen a video of a bride making a grand entrance in a crane. Then there's a groom who arrived on top of a cag-ed lion in 2017. A quick search on 'Pakistan's most expensive weddings' tells a story about the marriage of political and business interests and features destination weddings, lots of bling, and a groom's arrival in a helicopter.

The real story is about the widening economic inequality. The number of Indians living below the poverty line amounted to 10.2pc of the population in 2023 according to the World Bank, whereas the figure for Pakistan was 37.2pc.

There is a boiling undercurrent of rage that no one is addressing beyond political sloganeering. Power (read: wealth) remains in the hands of a very small circle and their children are bartered in marriage to maintain that structure. There is never any talk about the redistribution of wealth. How can there be in an oligarchy? Instead, we're all fixated on 'this new level of rich people watching' as Leanne Delap wrote in Toronto Star but I assure you it's not harmless fun. It is a reminder that such weddings are a symptom of our rotten system begging for an overhaul. -- Courtesy Dawn

Pakistan of 2047

Aizaz Ahmad Chaudhry

What will Pakistan look like in 2047, a century after it achieved independence? Given its unstable politics, weak economy and fragile law and order, and the rapidly evolving global and regional geopolitics, it is not easy to predict Pakistan's future. Therefore, projections must be based mainly on proposed reforms the country should legislate on and earnestly implement to reconstruct the economic trajectory it had once embarked upon during the 1950s and early 1960s.

Central to the proposed reforms is a clearly articulated vision and a detailed long-term economic plan. An overview of the recent past reveals that we failed to achieve results even when the planning was sound on paper. In 1990, Pakistan launched an ambitious programme of economic liberalisation. However, this programme fell victim to the political instability of the 1990s. Another attempt was made in the late 1990s to draft a vision and long-term plan in the form of Vision 2010. This was scuttled by the military coup of 1999. In 2013, Pakistan's 11th five-year plan for 2013-18 was launched as part of the medium-term Vision 2025. This was intended to be the first stage of a long-term vision leading to 2047. It appeared that Vision 2025 would not reach its logical end because of the acute political instability since 2017 and debilitating policy reversals that have shattered investor confidence.

The World Bank published a report five years ago in 2019, titled 'Pakistan@2047: Shaping the Future', which predicted that Pakistan could become an upper middle-income country by 2047, but that this aim would require accelerated and sustainable growth over a 30-year period. The report suggested several reforms: a focus on human capital through sustainable population growth and efficient public spending on education and health; a technology-savvy taxation system; a business regulatory framework free of red tape; a check on the unsustainable use of finite resources, particularly water, and fuller participation of the female labour force in the Pakistani economy.

It also recommended public service delivery be made transparent and accountable by completely devolving responsibilities and resources to local governments. Political leaders, public officials, and service providers would also be held accountable.

The present government is working on Pakistan Outlook 2035 and Vision 2047 based on a study being prepared under the auspices of the Planning Commission and aimed at drawing up a roadmap for rapid socioeconomic development. Some details are available on the website of the Ministry of Planning, Development, and Special Initiatives. Reportedly, the study will pick up the seven pillars on which Vision 2025 was built, including human resource development, sustained growth, democratic governance, institutional reform, water and food security, an enhanced role for the private sector, a competitive knowledge economy, and greater regional connectivity. The study is also guided by the 5Es framework: exports, e-Pakistan, environment and climate change, energy, and equity and empowerment.

According to the planning minister, if we follow a path of stable politics and steady economic policies, Pakistan might become a trillion-dollar economy by 2035. Speaking at the Islamabad Business Summit 2024 recently, the minister affirmed Pakistan's potential to achieve the targets of $2tr by 2047 with a growth rate of seven per cent and $3tr with a growth rate of 9pc.

These are commendable aspirations. However, given the ground realities, are we on our way to achieve these well-intentioned goals? Do we have the political and economic stability that can generate sustained economic growth and social development? Regrettably, there appears to be no sign of our political leaders being ready to work together to build a future of shared prosperity for all citizens. The country is in need of a consensus-based politico-economic vision to be able to say with confidence that by 2047, Pakistan will attain prosperity. Everyone agrees that Pakistan has been endowed with the right mix of elements that could create a development bonanza: young human resource, fertile land, minerals-rich mountains, a great coastline, and an outstanding economic geography. With such resources, the country can certainly achieve the aspirational goals cited above, provided we can ensure political stability, law and order backed by an impartial judiciary, continuity of economic policies, a streamlined regulatory framework, tax compliance by all, an enhanced role for the private sector, efficient resource utilisation, non-partisan accountability, and a foreign policy that works for regional peace. This is indeed a tall order, but it is worth pursuing for a peaceful and prosperous 2047, the centennial year of our independence. -- Courtesy Dawn

Haroon Sharif sys: Elite bargain for structural transformation, governance way forward for eco. progress

ISLAMABAD (APP): Former Minister of State, Board of Investment (BOI), Haroon Sharif has said that the only way forward for economic progress is to embrace a structural transformation prevailing in the economic system of the country through elite bargaining insulating the beneficiaries of the status quo with improved governance responding developing regional trends.

The former Chairman BOI explained that the country's prevailing structure, modalities and tools to improve GDP demanded diversification in the market and business practices catering to the needs of both the regional nations and the local masses, Haroon Sharif stated that in a talk organised by Sustainable Development Policy Institute (SDPI). "Elite bargain or political will is that elites of a country reconsider their models and bargain on shifting over new economic models and systems. We also need to include politicians and businessmen and beneficiaries of this system to change the structure," Haroon Sharif said.

The second option is to succumb to the young population's pressure either willingly or by force to change the system as for elite bargain other than the electorate pressure-based changes, and transformation mega steps are taken to change the ways of doing business like Taiwan, Vietnam and others did, he added.

"Asia's successful examples of economic structure transformation including East Asia and Southeast Asia have been on governing the markets who had identified economic winners and supported them to deliver their economic goals. India's three decades journey where it has reformed its economic structure and built up its private sector is evident. Pakistan has to start from somewhere," he mentioned.

He said the country's financial system is unable to support new development initiatives which is the job of the development banks and not the commercial banks. For instance, to promote the agriculture sector the government should revive ZTBL with the help of Chinese investors which is lying redundant through capital and experts.

Saigol asks govt to reduce production to make trade, industry competitive

LAHORE (INP): Chairman Pakistan Industrial and Traders Associations Front (PIAF) Faheemur Rehman Saigol has asked the government to take prompt measures to bring down the production costs for trade and industries to enable them to compete in the international market.

He said that trade and industry was currently having difficulty to compete the global market because of rapid increase in production costs. He said that the high cost of production was not good for our exports.

"The cost of production is a major factor, which makes an industry stand out among competitors in the world market," he explained. Faheemur Rehman Saigol said that high energy tariffs, shortage of fuel for machines, high rate of taxes, and lack of skilled labor are the main reasons behind the increase in the cost of production. He expressed concern that the reduction in industries' contribution to Pakistan's gross domestic product (GDP) is a worrying trend.

"Manufacturing and production industries have the potential to significantly impact economic growth by reducing unemployment in the country. The government needs to take solid steps to make doing business easier," he added. He said lack of research and development (R&D) is one of the major reasons behind the increase in the cost of production in any industry. "Sometimes we have the resources, but we make poor decisions. A poor decision means poor practices of work execution," he added.

Call for prioritising 'caring economy' in Pakistan

LAHORE (APP): SAARC Chamber of Commerce and Industry former president Ifthikhar Ali Malik has said prioritising a 'caring economy' in Pakistan is essential for economic growth, gender equality, social well-being in the country.

Talking to a trade delegation, led by Muslim Khan Bunerhi here on Sunday, he said by investing in care services and infrastructure, the country could harness the full potential of its population, ensuring a more equitable and prosperous future for all.

Malik said a caring economy fosters social cohesion and well-being. Accessible and high-quality care services can reduce inequality, improve health services, and enhance the quality of life for all strata of society. In a country like Pakistan, where social safety nets are often inadequate, building a caring economy is vital for ensuring a more inclusive and resilient society, he maintained.

Malik said the caring economy approach can help address Pakistan's demographic challenges. With a growing population and increasing life expectancy, the demand for care services is set to rise. Developing a robust care infrastructure can not only provide essential services to the elderly and children but also create millions of jobs, thereby reducing unemployment and underemployment. Children among 30 killed in Israeli strike on Gaza school Monitoring Desk CAIRO: At least 30 Palestinians were killed in an Israeli airstrike on a school housing displaced people in Gaza on Saturday, Palestinian health officials said. The Hamas-run government media office said 15 children and eight women were among those killed in the strike in the central town of Deir Al-Balah. More than 100 people were wounded, the media office and the Gaza health ministry said. Israel's military said it had targeted fighters operating there and that it had taken steps to reduce the risk to civilians. Separately, nine people were killed in a rocket attack on a football ground in the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights on Saturday. At Al-Aqsa Hospital in Deir Al-Balah, ambulances rushed the wounded in for treatment. Some people arrived on foot, their clothes stained with blood. Reuters footage showed people returning to the site of the bombing to check on their belongings, and fires burning in the area. Um Hasan Ali, a displaced woman living at the school, said it had only been a couple of months since she returned to Gaza from Egypt with her daughter who had been taken there for medical treatment. Now her daughter had been wounded in the strike and taken to hospital, she said. Another woman, Ibtihal Ahmed, told Reuters she was sitting in a neighbour's tent when she heard heavy bombing. "I started running, my daughter was one place and I was at another, I saw people running towards the place that was struck. The people sheltering in Khadija school are all wounded people, they are innocent and this should not happen to them," she said. On Saturday, the military said it had instructed Palestinians to evacuate the southern neighborhoods of Khan Younis and move to the Al-Mawasi humanitarian zone. Israeli attacks in Khan Younis on Saturday killed 14 people, health officials said. UN and humanitarian officials accuse Israel of using disproportionate force in the war and of failing to ensure civilians have safe places to go, which it denies. In the Israeli-occupied West Bank, Nabil Abu Rudeineh, spokes-person for Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas, blamed the Israeli attacks on the support of the US.

Putin warns the United States of Cold War-style missile crisis

Monitoring Desk MOSCOW: Russian President Vladimir Putin on Sunday warned the United States that if Washington deployed long-range missiles in Germany then Russia would station similar missiles in striking distance of the West. The United States said on July 10 that it would start deploying long-range missiles in Germany from 2026 in preparation for a longer-term deployment that will include SM-6, Tomahawk cruise missiles and developmental hypersonic weapons. In a speech to sailors from Russia, China, Algeria and India to mark Russian navy day in the former imperial capital of St Petersburg, Putin warned the United States that it risked triggering a Cold War-style missile crisis with the move. "The flight time to targets on our territory of such missiles, which in the future may be equipped with nuclear warheads, will be about 10 minutes," Putin said. "We will take mirror measures to deploy, taking into account the actions of the United States, its satellites in Europe and in other regions of the world." Putin, who sent his army into Ukraine in 2022, casts the war as part of a historic struggle with the West, which he says humiliates Russia after Soviet Union fell in 1991 by encroaching on what he considers Moscow's sphere of influence. Ukraine and the West say Putin is engaged in an imperial-style land grab. They have vowed to defeat Russia, which currently controls about 18% of Ukraine, including Crimea, and parts of four regions in eastern Ukraine.

Meloni vows to 'relaunch' Italy's cooperation with China

Monitoring Desk ROME: Italian Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni vowed on Sunday to "relaunch" cooperation with China, signing a three-year action plan during her first official visit to Beijing since taking office. Meloni, who has led a right-wing government since 2022, made the announcement during a meeting with Chinese Premier Li Qiang, as Rome seeks to improve trade ties with Beijing after it exited President Xi Jinping's flagship Belt and Road infrastructure investment scheme last year. The Italian leader said her five-day trip was a "demonstration of the will to begin a new phase, to relaunch our bilateral cooperation". The action plan aims to experiment with new forms of cooperation, she added in a video shown Italy's RAI state television network. The industrial cooperation memorandum signed by Italy and China "includes strategic industrial sectors such as electric mobility and renewables," Meloni said later in the day. Meloni, who sees Chinese investment as a way to spur Italy's anaemic economic growth, will meet Xi and China's top legislator, Zhao Leji, third in the leadership hierarchy. She also attended an Italy-China business forum, to which companies including Italian tyre-maker Pirelli, energy group ENI, defence group Leonardo, wine producers and several Italian luxury fashion groups such as Dolce & Gabbana were invited.

Oil leaking from sunken tanker in Manila Bay

The oil slick has now more than tripled in size and is now estimated to stretch 12-14 kilometres across the bay, which thousands of fishermen and tourism operators rely on for their livelihoods. Divers inspected the hull of the vessel on Saturday and saw a "minimal leak" from the valves, Coast Guard spokesman Rear Admiral Armando Balilo said, adding it was "not alarming yet".

earlier rains. Forecasters warned that the remnants of Gaemi's vast cloudbanks could still dump rain on already waterlogged cities. Philippines says China mischaracterised South China Sea deal Monitoring Desk MANILA: The Philippines' foreign ministry accused China on Sunday of "mischaracterising" an arrangement between them that allowed the unimpeded resupply of Filipino troops stationed on a beached naval vessel in the South China Sea. After repeated clashes in the disputed Second Thomas Shoal, the two countries reached a "provisional arrangement" earlier this month on resupply missions to soldiers stationed at the Sierra Madre, a naval vessel Manila deliberately grounded in 1999 to reinforce its maritime claims. Philippine foreign ministry spokesperson Teresita Daza said on Saturday the resupply mission that day was completed without incident while Chinese coast guard vessels were at a "reasonable distance". However, her Chinese counterpart said that China's coast guard was notified ahead of the mission and had "let the vessel through" after an "on-the-scene confirmation". Daza said on Sunday it was "unfortunate" China "mischaracterised" the resupply mission. "Instead of acknowledging how two countries were able to manage differences in order to avoid miscalculation and misunderstanding, the spokesperson chose to misrepresent what has been agreed between the Philippines and China," Daza said in a statement. The Chinese embassy in Manila did not immediately respond to a request for comment outside office hours. Details of the arrangement between China and the Philippines have not been publicly released, but both countries have said the deal was aimed at easing tensions in the waterway.
