Fazlur Rehman criticises KP for prioritising politics over public interest

PESHAWAR (INP): In a sharp critique of recent legislative changes, Jamiat Ulema-e-Islam (JUI-F) chief Maulana Fazlur Rehman has said Pakistan's 26th Constitutional Amendment has introduced laws that make citizens feel like "suspects in their own country."

Fazlur Rehman's comments came in Peshawar, where he offered condolences on the death of prominent political figure Ilyas Bilour.

"The people of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa are enduring severe hardships," he told reporters, alleging that the provincial government has placed politics above public welfare. "Their entire focus is on politics rather than on maintaining peace, which is wrong," he added.

The JUI-F leader criticised the removal of Article 8 during the 26th Amendment, which he claims has opened the door for laws that infringe upon basic rights.

"Following this amendment, legislation has been rushed that violates human rights," he said.

According to Rehman, these laws permit authorities to detain anyone for up to 90 days without due process.

IMF's concern

On Friday, the IMF team wrapped up its weeklong unscheduled talks on the Fund's ongoing $7bn programme with the Pakistani authorities without making a customary end-of-mission statement, thus leaving most people in the dark about the outcome of the discussions. Some media reports have conjectured that the lender might comment on its findings soon. However, although we do not have all the details, it is clear from the information provided to journalists during the course of the talks that the Fund is seriously "concerned" over delays in the materialisation of foreign loans of $2.5bn, including a Saudi oil facility of $1.2bn, and the shortfall of Rs190bn in the tax collection target for the July-October period. The slow progress on the National Fiscal Pact, signed by the provinces and the centre, and delays in the privatisation of SOEs seem to have emerged as other areas of concern for the Fund, as the provinces have yet to align their farm and property tax rates with the federal tax regime.

It looks like the government is falling short of meeting several critical structural benchmark targets. Nonetheless, it still has some time to meet or, at least, move closer to, the targets as the first 'formal biannual review' of the bailout loan is expected to take place towards the end of February or early March. Dependent on a successful programme performance review is the disbursement of the next $1bn tranche and, more critically, the market's confidence in the economy. The fact that fiscal deviations and delays in implementing other targets had alarmed the lender, compelling it to dispatch an early mission to protect the programme from derailment, indicates that the Fund would like to keep Islamabad on a tight leash. In spite of the strict implementation of the last short-term IMF SBA loan, Pakistan's track record has not inspired much confidence in the country's commitment to undertaking reforms. As they say, 'once bitten, twice shy' — multilateral and bilateral lenders are no longer in a mood to ignore the dilly-dallying on critical targets. The prime minister and his finance team have repeatedly pledged to make the current IMF bailout the country's last. But that appears to be more of political rhetoric than a plan, given the way they have allowed powerful lobbies — retailers, real estate businesses and others — to influence the government's economic decisions.

Black Water

Shahzad Sharjeel

The Trump victory in the recent US election has brought the subject of immigration under even greater focus. Along with forced displacements caused by wars, disasters and calamities, economic migrants in search of better livelihoods are defining politics worldwide. The UK tried sending immigrants to Rwanda under an agreement with the latter, but the scheme came to naught. Among other reasons, while Paul Kagame keeps getting elected to lead Rwanda and ensures consistency in policies, the British are becoming used to having more prime ministers in five years than most countries have in a decade or more. The scheme has thankfully failed, and with Labour having taken the reins at 10 Downing Street, it is not likely to be revived anytime soon. The good thing is that Rwanda gets to keep the money Britain paid them to get them to agree to this machination.

People like me could not understand the idea initially because we missed a significant point: we kept looking at it from a human rights lens, whereas the proponents of shipping would-be immigrants to the far-off corner of Africa looked at it from a legal perspective. Entering a country illegally or overstaying a legal permit is a crime.

What complicates the issue is that these lawbreakers do not usually try to evade the law. On the contrary, they announce their real motive for breaching the law as soon as they land on British soil and petition for asylum. In other words, those in favour of sending the aspiring immigrants to Rwanda see it just like another penal colony of yore, and the deportees as 'criminals'.

Prof Thomas Sowell noted, "Immigration laws are the only laws discussed in terms of how to help people who break them."

Of course, the evolution of international law and how countries conduct their business in modern times would not allow them to dump shiploads of people on some island and wash their hands off them as they done in the past. Australia and the Andaman Islands, more commonly known as 'Kala Pani' (Black Water), are earlier examples of penal colonies.

Angola, the southern African country, is hardly ever mentioned in the same breath as other penal colonies. The Portuguese used it as one as far back as the 16th century. Unlike Australia, which received a mixed bag of lawbreakers from Britain, Angola only got the most hardened and dangerous convicts, and who turned to slave trading after serving their sentences.

Angola's woes refused to go away with time. While the out-bound human trafficking may have abated, as late as 2006, China transported shiploads of convicts to Angola as labourers and asked them to stay after serving their sentences as it did not want them back. Despite being a very densely forested country, it has no wild animals. You read it right, except for a dozen or so giant sable antelopes, the country's national symbol, this beautiful African country has no wild animals left in a reserve park. Wondering what happened? Well, they were either blown to pieces by landmines or eaten, because international politics and the resultant long civil wars did not allow any economy to take root, and people had to eat. So how come Australia grew into a prosperous country and joined the league of other developed, primarily white, nations despite its humble antecedents? Why does Kala Pani only evoke a dreaded reminder of the subcontinent's plunder by the colonialists?

The Chinese are doing wonders worldwide, from mining rare earth to copper, running telecoms to building mammoth infrastructure; why haven't these 'pioneers' in Angola transformed Luanda and Huambo into a Sydney or a Perth? Well, one very pessimistic and deeply disturbing answer may be that it is geographic entities and the new arrivals who prospered in Australia, not the Aboriginal population. The native people and fauna of Angola continue to face extinction through landmines made in the US. It is anybody's guess where the AK-47s used during the bloody civil wars are made.

We have had quite a seamless transition from Kala Pani to Blackwater; only the seams are bursting now with organically grown and invasive species of predators. Residues of the Afghan wars have included not just heroin and Kalashnikovs but also landmines in erstwhile Fata; Blackwater, and other private contractors running spy ops; and fourth-rate informants and clerics enjoying state hospitality as high-value assets and guests.

Things need to change for the better and change fast, lest we become the first-ever example in the world where the natives feel as if they're condemned to a penal colony. We already have the dubious honour of being the only instance in human history where the majority ceded from a minority. Let us not create any more negative records. - Courtesy Dawn

Et tu, Maryam?

Muna Khan

How much should we know about Punjab Chief Minister Maryam Nawaz's health? As a public official, should her health be up for the media's scrutiny? The media dictates so; the understanding is that politicians all over the world lose their right to privacy once they step into public office. Their health becomes an important story, especially if it threatens to impact their job.

But the Sharif family's health has received more scrutiny than others; from the brother's cosmetic surgeries to the most despicable manner in which Kulsoom Nawaz's illness was mocked as 'drama' on TV. So-called journalists said she was at a London clinic getting Botox when she was being treated for cancer in 2017. Someone also tried to break into her hospital room. Maryam Nawaz is routinely mocked for plastic surgery in the rudest of manners by the rudest of them all, Ali Amin Gandapur. Misogyny may as well be declared a national pastime. Notice how they use 'naani' as a pejorative for her. Women are wishing for Maryam to disappear, proving the feminist writer bell hooks (who uses lowercase letters to write her name) was right when she said "patriarchy has no gender".

People in power have a duty to be transparent about their health, and the media has to report to the public if leaders are not being truthful.

A part of the reason there was so much media attention on Joe Biden's visible cognitive decline was because it impacted his performance. I think people will look back at this time and ask why he was allowed to continue. There are plenty of leaders who hid their illnesses and I understand that they did so because they did not want to be seen as weak. History shows how leaders' poor health led to poor decision-making. And when they told the truth, like Norway's prime minister Kjell Bondevik did when he admitted to having depression and taking a month off work, it was greatly respected. And helped fight stigma about depression.

Maryam Nawaz is under scrutiny for a few reasons, some of which are due to misogyny, her unpopularity and, I'm sorry to say, her high-end designer wear. Initially I thought it was petty, but when I saw her draped in fur in London, I imitated the slap-on-forehead emoji we all use. To be clear, I am not policing her clothing choices. I'm questioning the messaging it sends at a time when thousands are sick in Punjab due to the smog.

She has every right to seek medical treatment wherever she likes, especially when her mother was diagnosed with throat cancer in 2017. Much like Imran Khan wants to be examined by his doctors, she too wants treatment from her doctors. This system is so flawed that people across the political divide do not trust hospitals because everyone fears being poisoned. The irony is that every party has played a role in creating this poisonous environment.

But I digress. Ms Nawaz's health does not explain why senior minister Mariyum Aurangzeb travelled with her at this critical juncture. Or why the chief minister flew on a special air force plane, as reported in the media. This fuels the perception that the party doesn't take its responsibilities seriously. While she was in Geneva, Punjab's Minister of Information

Azma Bukhari posted pictures from her umrah trip on Instagram. There are news reports the provincial chief secretary is away too.

This is a valid question. Instead, a lot of the media and YouTube-verse has focused on inane issues like Mariyum Aurangzeb carrying Maryam Nawaz's purse in Geneva or calculating the cost of the fur the chief minister wore. Then there was the reporting on the father and daughter meeting abusive attacks in London. As a side note, abusing opponents should be de-clared a national sport. We know which team will always win.

Surely, we can do better journalism. That means asking tough questions about Maryam's plans to tackle the smog crisis, beyond the sloganeering we've seen so far. We should be spared the breakdown of the elder Sharif's platelet count that dominated the airwaves a few years ago. If her health is an impediment to doing her job, someone else must be deputized to do it. Report, do not speculate, do not sensationalise.

At the time of writing, Ms Aurangzeb had returned and announced that the smog in Punjab had "now" turned into a health crisis. The media should "now" go into overdrive and report on the actions being taken to fix this problem. This includes reporting on what is causing the toxic pollutants and what the responsible parties are doing to mitigate the crisis. In this age of connectivity, you can't fool people for political gain. There is a serious trust deficit between political leaders and the public and only transparency can mend it. -- Courtesy Dawn

ADB launches major initiative to build resilience to melting glaciers

ISLAMABAD (APP): The Asian Development Bank (ADB) on Sunday launched a new regional program, Glaciers to Farms that will promote sustainable water use and food security in Central Asia, the South Caucasus, and Pakistan amid the catastrophic impacts of accelerated glacial melt due to climate change.

Supported by the Green Climate Fund's (GCF) Project Preparation Facility, ADB will conduct risk assessments of glacial melt in Azerbaijan, the Kyrgyz Republic, Tajikistan, and Uzbekistan—forming the scientific and technical basis for the Glacier to Farms program, according to ADB press release received here.

With temperatures in the region projected to rise by up to 6 degrees Celsius by 2100, the loss of glacial mass threatens the fragile balance of ecosystems, jeopardizing water supply for agriculture and hydropower, and risking the livelihoods of more than 380 million people.

COP29 President and Azerbaijan Minister of Ecology and Natural Resources Mukhtar Babayev; Kazakhstan Minister of Ecology and Natural Resources Yerlan Nysanbayev; Kyrgyz Republic Minister of Natural Resources, Ecology and Technical Supervision Meder Mashiev; Tajikistan Committee on Environmental Protection Chairman Bahodur Sherailizoda; and Uzbekistan Minister of Ecology, Environmental Protection, and Climate Change Aziz Abdulkhakov signed a declaration of support for preserving glaciers with ADB President Masatsugu Asakawa and GCF Chief Investment Officer Henry Gonzalez.

"As melting glaciers change waterflows, disrupt lives, and destroy ecosystems, we must act now," said Asakawa. "As Asia and the Pacific's climate bank, we are pleased to be joined by key partners to launch this program to drive international collaboration and deliver results where they matter most—on the ground, in communities at risk," he added.

Glaciers to Farms envisages mobilizing up to $3.5 billion from ADB, GCF, governments, development partners, and the private sector, subject to the participating institutions' board approvals.

In addition to water and agriculture investments, the program will support vulnerable communities threatened by glacial melt, particularly in fragile mountain regions.

"The GCF recognizes the regional Glaciers to Farms program as a vital initiative to enhance climate resilience and promote sustainable development," said Gonzalez. "Recognizing the profound vulnerability of mountain communities and ecosystems, this program is instrumental in safeguarding our precious water resources and empowering those most at risk. This program embodies the essential collaboration and innovative strategies needed to address the severe challenges posed by climate change. Together, we can build a resilient and sustainable future for all—especially for the vulnerable populations who depend on our mountain landscapes."

Terminating PPAs – A panacea to release consumers from IPPs clutches

ISLAMABAD (APP): Switching towards Competitive Trading Bilateral Contracts Market (CTBCM) regime, liberalization and privatization of power sector will have longstanding effects on power tariff, paving way for relief to consumers and contribute to overall economic growth of the country.

Since high-power tariff had been hammering our economic growth and piling up huge circular debt, the initiative of premature termination of power purchase agreements (PPAs) with dozens of independent power producers (IPPs) will also help resolve these grave issues.

Mounting debt load, rising power prices and an astonishing Rs 1,411,669 million capacity payment made to IPPs during fiscals 2022-23 and 2023-24 made the Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif's government to come out with solutions to stem out this menace and lessen burden on consumers and national kitty.

The government set up a Task Force to implement structural reforms with Minister for Power Sardar Awais

Ahmad Khan Leghari as its Chairman, PM's Special Assistant on power Muhammad Ali as co-Chairman and Lt Gen Zafar Iqbal as National Coordinator also including in it representatives from various regulatory bodies.

Initially, after detailed deliberations with IPPs, Awais Leghari announced premature termination of PPAs with five oldest IPPs to save Rs 411 billion with an impact of around 71 paisa per unit on average electricity tariff. "Contracts with Saba, Lalpur, Atlas and Roush having accumulative generation capacity of

2,463 Megawatt (MWs), set up under 1994 power policy were terminated through "mutual agreement."

Leghari said, process of reviewing contracts with other IPPs and state-owned power plants would further reduce tariffs by Rs 8-10 per unit. "Termination agreement with five IPPs was one of the several measures to reduce tariffs. We also desire to convert existing clause of 'take or pay' for IPPs established under 2002 power policy, to 'take and pay.'" He also mentioned to reducing tariffs by Rs3.5 per unit through agreements with local IPPs, Rs3.75 per unit by re-profiling debt of Chinese IPPs, Rs0.75 per unit through surcharges, Rs0.72 per unit by closing five IPPs and Rs0.16 per unit reduction by removing television fee from electricity bills.

Special Assistant to PM, Muhammad Ali also hoped an agreement with bagasse based power plants for tariff cuts and revise PPAs with 18 other IPPs within next four to six months. "Negotiations had been completed with bagasse-based IPPs for de-linking their international coal-based pricing indexed to US dollar.

Azma Bokhari says: IMF acknowledged Punjab govt.'s progress towards achieving targeted surplus LAHORE (APP): Punjab Information Minister Azma Bokhari has rebutted the contents of a news item published under the headline "Provinces face new targets under fiscal pact", in an English language daily on November 17, asserting that the news report falsely refers to the government of Punjab's investment in a UAE-based fund.

Contradicting the erroneous impression created in the news, the Information Minister said that the government of Punjab has not invested in any UAE-based fund. "Since there is no such investment in a UAE-based fund, this was never discussed in the meeting of the IMF with the functionaries of the government of Punjab. Furthermore, the news item wrongly insinuates IMF's alarm over the previously incorrectly reported 1st quarter deficit of Punjab," she mentioned.

Azma Bokhari said that the IMF agreed that the Punjab government had a surplus of approximately Rs 40 billion at the end of the 1st quarter and as such the Ministry of Finance, government of Pakistan corrected its data and uploaded revised fiscal operations reflecting the Punjab government's surplus. "Lastly, the news item also misreports that Punjab fell short of its surplus target of Rs. 150 billion at the end of the 1st quarter.

Israel carries out wave of air strikes on Beirut

Monitoring Desk
BEIRUT: Israel launched a wave of air strikes on Hezbollah bastions in Beirut and south Lebanon, a day after Lebanese government officials said they were studying a US truce proposal. Since Tuesday, Israel has carried out several air raids on the city's southern suburbs, a stronghold of Hezbollah. AFP TV video showed three plumes of smoke rising over buildings in the area on Saturday morning, and another around midday.

Shortly before the morning attack, Israeli military spokesman Avichay Adraee posted on X a call for residents of the Haret Hreik suburb to evacuate.

"You are close to facilities and interests belonging to Hezbollah, against which the Israeli military will be acting with force in the near future," the post said in Arabic, identifying specific buildings and telling residents to move at least 500 metres away. A similar warning was also issued before the midday strike.

An Israeli strike on neighbouring Syria earlier this week killed two leaders from Islamic Jihad, a Palestinian group which has fought alongside Hamas in Gaza, a source told AFP.

Since September 23, Israel has escalated its bombing of targets in Lebanon, later sending in ground troops after almost a year of limited, cross-border exchanges of fire with Hezbollah fighters. AFP TV footage showed fresh strikes on the southern suburbs of Beirut on Saturday, following calls from the Israeli army for residents to evacuate.

Lebanon's state-run National News Agency said Israel carried out three air raids in the morning, later reporting another attack in the neighbourhood of Chiyah. It also reported a strike on the southern city of Tyre, in a neighbourhood near UNESCO-listed ancient ruins.

Elsewhere in south Lebanon, the health ministry said Israeli strikes killed two rescuers affiliated with Hezbollah and its ally Amal. Hezbollah claimed several rocket attacks on northern Israel, targeting military sites including a naval base in the Haifa area.

Lebanese authorities say that more than 3,440 people have been killed since Israel launched its offensive. In a rare claim of responsibility for a strike on Syria, Israel said it targeted the Islamic Jihad group on Thursday. A source from the group told AFP on Saturday that Abdel Aziz Minawi, a member of Islamic Jihad's political bureau, and the group's foreign relations chief Rasmi Abu Issa were killed in the strike on Qudsaya, in the Damascus area. Islamic Jihad still holds several Israeli prisoners taken during the October 7 attack on southern Israel. Earlier this week, the group released two video clips of Sasha Trupanov, a 29-year-old Russian-Israeli prisoner.

China ready to work with Trump team, Xi tells Biden in Peru

Monitoring Desk
LIMA: Chinese President Xi Jinping on Saturday vowed to work with the incoming US administration of President-elect Donald Trump as he held his final talks with outgoing President Joe Biden on key conflicts from cyber crime to trade, Taiwan and Russia.

Biden met Xi for about two hours at a hotel where the Chinese leader was staying, on the sidelines of the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation forum in Lima, Peru, for their first talks in seven months.

"China's goal of a stable, healthy and sustainable China-U.S. relationship remains unchanged," following the election, Xi said, acknowledging "ups and downs" between the countries.

"China is ready to work with the new U.S. administration to maintain communication, expand cooperation and manage differences."

Biden told Xi that the two leaders haven't always agreed but their discussions have been "frank" and "candid."

The talks come two months before Trump assumes office. He has vowed to adopt blanket 60% tariffs on U.S. imports of Chinese goods as part of a package of "America First" trade measures.

Beijing opposes those steps. The Republican president-elect also plans to hire several hawkish voices on China in senior roles, including U.S. Senator Marco Rubio as secretary of state and Representative Mike Waltz as national security adviser.

Monitoring Desk
KYIV: Blasts rang out across Ukraine's capital Kyiv and other cities early on Sunday, as Russia staged its biggest missile attack since August and targeted power facilities with the winter setting in, officials said.

Ukrainians have been bracing for a major attack on the hobbled power system for weeks, fearing crippling damage to the grid that would cause long blackouts and build psychological pressure at a critical moment in the war Russia launched in February 2022.

"Another massive attack on the power system is under way.

The enemy is attacking electricity generation and transmission facilities throughout Ukraine," Ukrainian Energy Minister German Galushchenko wrote on Facebook.

Air defences could be heard engaging drones over the capital in the night, and a series of powerful blasts rang out across the city centre as the missile attack was under way in the morning.

The president-elect also had his clenched fists pumping back and forth and briefly danced to the Village People's "YMCA" just outside the cage. He later again thrust his fist skyward as "Takin' Care of

Pope Francis suggests international study into possible genocide in Gaza

Monitoring Desk
KYIV: Russia unleashed its largest wave of airstrikes on Ukraine in almost three months on Sunday, firing 120 missiles and 90 drones in a sweeping attack that killed at least seven people and caused "severe damage" to the power system, officials said.

Ukrainians have been bracing for weeks for an attack on the hobbled energy system, fearing crippling damage that would cause long blackouts as winter sets in and ramp up psychological pressure at a critical moment in the war launched by Russia in February 2022. The strikes, which prompted emergency power cuts in numerous regions, came after this month's US presidential election victory of Donald Trump, whose pledge to end the war without saying how has raised the prospect of a looming push to hold negotiations.

"Russia launched one of the largest air attacks: drones and missiles against peaceful cities, sleeping civilians, critical infrastructure," Foreign Minister Andrii Sybha wrote on X.

Air defences could be heard engaging drones over the capital in the night, and a series of powerful blasts rang out across the city centre as the missile attack was under way in the morning.

Kyiv's air force said the military had destroyed 104 out of 120 missiles fired and 42 out of 90 drones launched by Russia.

Russia's defence ministry said it had launched a massive strike on energy facilities that supply Ukraine's military-industrial complex.

Lok Mela serves as lifeline for country's fading traditional crafts

ISLAMABAD (APP): The lively Lok Mela festival has evolved from a celebration into a vital support system for the country's diminishing traditional crafts, allowing artisans nationwide to display their creations, earn recognition, and preserve their ancestral legacies.

Lok Mela stands as a beacon of hope in a rapidly modernizing world where centuries-old crafts often face the risk of extinction. This year, a significant number of young artisans graced the festival, many of whom were apprentices learning the trade under the tutelage of their elders.

Participation of these artisans has reflected a growing interest among the youth in preserving the cultural treasures of their regions.

Samia Inam, a wholesale cloth entrepreneur, shared her journey of employing women from Bahawalpur to produce exquisite hand-embroidered garments. Her dresses, ranging from Rs. 3,000 to Rs. 10,000, exemplify intricate craftsmanship. While buyers increasingly lean towards branded outfits, Samia believes the uniqueness and durability of hand embroidery are regaining popularity.

However, she noted a disparity in earnings, with artisans from remote areas working for minimal wages while sellers earn significant profits.

Naeem Soomro, a Kashigar from Hala, Sindh, captivated visitors with his display of Kashi Kari products such as jars, vases, and fountains. This ancient art form, traditionally limited to blue and white colored designs, has evolved with vibrant colors to meet modern demand.
