The ban question

Renewed talk about banning one of the country's largest political parties shows nothing but the impoverishment of democratic thought in the Pakistani power elite. Following the forcible eviction of the PTI's latest protest from the federal capital, some entities have once again taken to describing the party as a 'terrorist outfit' and are seeking its proscription. Thankfully, the PPP, JUI and some others have opposed the measure, calling it a bad idea.

Others, perhaps most surprisingly the ANP, have made no bones about the fact that they wish to see the PTI removed from the picture completely. However, the parties that want the PTI to be banned do not seem to realise that they are veering away from the very 'democratic' credentials they claim to possess.

The recent round of condemnations started with the Balochistan Assembly, which passed a resolution on Thursday amid an opposition walk-out calling to ban the party after its recent protests. Even by the sketchy standards of democracy in the province, this marked a new low. A similar resolution was also tabled in the Punjab Assembly, but this could not be passed with the same alacrity shown by the Balochistan Assembly, seemingly due to the PPP's opposition to the move.

Meanwhile, the federal cabinet considered imposing governor's rule in KP but again, saner minds seemed to have prevailed. None of this, however, is as disappointing for a student of Pakistan's political history as the fact that the heir of Khan Abdul Wali Khan, Aimal Wali, current chief of the Awami National Party, has also joined the chorus of those seeking a ban on PTI, going so far as to call it a "waste that should be disposed of".

Among Pakistan's mainstream political parties, only two have been formally banned. One was the National Awami Party, led by Wali Khan, which was proscribed in 1975 but then came back to life as the ANP. The other was the Awami League, and the disastrous consequences of banning it led to the secession of East Pakistan. After usurping power, the dictator Gen Ziaul Haq attempted to ban the PPP too, and was instrumental in carving some factions out of it, but Bhutto's party also endured.

This history shows that bans simply do not work. All parties make mistakes, and the state and the citizenry can sometimes clash in violent ways. But this cannot be used to justify denying the public their constitutional right to organise under whatever banner they wish.

Instead of resorting to such arbitrary calls, all parties must focus on contributing positively towards the country's political culture by working to mitigate the divisions that exist between them and focusing on a negotiated solution. That is the only viable path forward in Pakistan's case.

Slicing Syria

Zarrar Khuhro

As I write this, Syrian rebels are in control of half of the ancient and strategically vital city of Aleppo. In a rapid three-day advance that saw government forces melt away, the rebels captured town after town before entering Aleppo. This is not only the biggest rebel advance in almost a decade, it is also the only time rebels have assaulted Aleppo since 2012, when they seized control of eastern Aleppo before being subjected to a brutal siege by Russian and Syrian forces in 2016, which ended in their retreat.

The offensive has upended the fragile balance established since the Russian and Iranian intervention — aided by a large deployment of pro-Iran forces like Hezbollah, various Iraqi militia groups and also the Al Fatemiyyoun and Al Zeinabiyyoun militias — helped Bashar al-Assad's floundering Syrian Arab army (SAA) retain control over approximately 70 per cent of the country.

The rebels — an alphabet soup of groups with differing ideologies and composition — retained control of the rest of Syria and have enjoyed the support of a changing cast of regional actors, notably Qatar, Saudi Arabia and Turkey, which has carved out a 'buffer zone' in northern Syria, ostensibly as a defence against attacks by the Kurdish Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF).

The rebels have also received political and logistical support (along with not-so-covert military aid) from several Western powers, notably the US, which retains 900 soldiers in Syria, ostensibly to protect against a resurgence by the Daesh.

The current advance is being spearheaded by Hayat al-Tahrir Sham (HTS) along with smaller groups and seemingly a not insignificant number of foreign fighters, such as Uzbeks and Chechens. Reports also seem to indicate that the SDF is cooperating with Russia and Assad's SAA, and while the fog of war is hard to penetrate, this would make sense given Turkey's support for the Syrian rebels.

Interestingly, the fall of Aleppo has also been welcomed by Taliban militant Hafiz Gul Bahadur, whose group hosted several Arab fighters in the past, some of whom went on to join HTS or its predecessor groups.

HTS has an interesting history: its leader, Abu Mohammed al-Golani, was the commander of Al Qaeda's Syria branch, and directed several bombing campaigns which targeted civilians as much as they did government forces. Since then, he has 'moderated' his stance enough to gain the tacit support (or at least end the opposition) of the US, which had designated HTS as a terrorist group. During Donald Trump's first presidency, the US acknowledged that HTS was no longer on its active target list.

This offensive comes at a time when none of Assad's allies — Iran, Russia or Hezbollah — have resources or troops that can be mobilised quickly to aid Assad's forces, which have often proven themselves incapable of fighting.

And it is no coincidence that this offensive — while undoubtedly planned well in advance — was launched just a few days after the Israel-Hezbollah ceasefire. Having lost a great part of its most senior leadership, and having suffered casualties and a serious depletion of their war material stocks, Hezbollah is in no position to aid Assad. Hezbollah also opened itself up for infiltration and intelligence gathering by Israel due to their involvement in Syria and may eschew another such involvement so soon, even if they had the resources to manage it.

The same largely goes for Russia, which is bogged down in Ukraine, where its best generals and troops must, of course, be deployed at the expense of the hitherto quiet Syrian front. Now, while some Russian air assets are indeed being deployed, it may well be too little, and certainly far too late, to slow the advance. Strategically, the prospect of losing a chunk of Syria poses a dilemma for Russia, which relies on the Syrian port of Tartus, which is effectively Russia's only foothold in the Mediterranean, and allows the Russian navy to repair, refuel and resupply without having to resort to its Black Sea bases.

In effect, this advance opens up new fronts for Russia, Hezbollah and Iran. The obvious beneficiaries are Israel and the US.

Depleted by its war against Israel in support of Gaza, Hezbollah needs to keep its overland supply routes open in order to be prepared for the inevitable second round with Israel, and the advance directly endangers those routes.

Israel, meanwhile, is sitting pretty, having closed the Lebanese front and redoubled its destruction of Gaza. Tel Aviv has a long history of supporting anti-Assad forces and even evacuating Al Qaeda-linked forces to occupied Golan for medical treatment by Israeli army medics. In 2018, outgoing Israeli chief of staff admitted to having armed anti-Assad rebels after years of denials. The dismantling of the 'axis of resistance' remains the goal and this is just one more step towards that end. -- Courtesy Dawn

Education reforms

Muhammad Memon

Educational reforms in the country have, from the start, struggled with issues of inequality, access, quality, and relevance. Major challenges have included insufficient public spending on education, low literacy rates, gender disparity, an inadequate infrastructure, and poor delivery. The national education policy of 2009 was a landmark reform. It emphasised increasing literacy rates, improving quality, and addressing gender disparities. However, it was not fully implemented due to many hurdles.

Pakistan is committed to the Education for All initiative, which aims at providing quality education to all children, particularly focusing on girls, marginalised groups, and those living in rural areas. Pakistan also undertook higher education reforms, notably with the creation of the Higher Education Commission in 2002. The HEC was tasked with improving research, funding, and infrastructure for the universities. To bridge the gap between education and the workforce, Pakistan has focused on reforms to enhance technical and vocational education in order to improve employability and economic productivity.

The Federal Ministry of Education has introduced a curriculum and assessment reform through a systematic process to improve the quality of education. The HEC has introduced teacher education reform, which helped revamp pre-service teacher education in the country. In order to assure the quality of teacher education, the HEC introduced accreditation for teacher education programmes. The Inter-Board Coordination Committee has introduced a grading scheme for the SSC and HSC examinations conducted by the Boards of Secondary and Intermediate Education in the country — again a positive step towards improving the quality of education. The respective provincial governments have also made a number of interventions for improving the quality of education, but their impact is yet to be determined.

Sindh has introduced teacher licensing managed by the Sindh Teacher Education Development Authority. Although it is at the initial stage, it will help professionalise teacher education and improve teacher quality. Like other provinces, Sindh has also introduced a cluster-based continuous professional development policy, replacing the ad hoc approach to in-service teacher education. A critical mass of human resources, including master trainers, guide teachers, and subject coordinators, has been developed. They will be responsible for teachers' continuous professional development. Under this policy, the subject coordinators have been playing a pivotal role in conducting classroom observations and formative assessments for coaching purposes. The Sindh government has plans to develop the accreditation framework and the continuous professional development qualification framework to promote quality teaching.

In order to fully transform the education system, reforms should focus on increasing public spending, which needs to be substantial in order to ensure that schools are well-funded and equipped with modern teaching resources. There should be a nationwide initiative to improve teacher training and professional development. This would raise the quality of instruction and improve student learning outcomes.

Education for girls must be a priority, especially in the rural and tribal areas. Incentive programmes, community engagement, and awareness campaigns will help resolve cultural barriers. Using technology for remote learning and optimising digital educational platforms can reduce some of the geographical disparities in our education system. Given the country's cultural and regional diversity, educational reforms should be localised to meet the unique needs of each region, while ensuring alignment with the larger national educational goals.

Educational reforms are normally project-driven and funded by donors. Although there are some successes, the projects tend to function in isolation rather than integrating with the mainstream. Donor-driven projects normally take off late due to procedural matters. A thorough implementation plan seems to be the best solution for effective results.

The sustainability of education reforms and their impact have been a long-standing issue, which must be tackled. Any education reform must be part of the national/ regional education development plan based on a needs assessment.

Pakistan has an opportunity to reshape its education system into one that meets the needs of all its citizens. A balanced approach, combining investment in infrastructure, teacher quality, curriculum and assessment reform, and technology integration, could provide the foundation for a more equitable and effective education system in the country. -- Courtesy Dawn

56 people killed in stampede following clashes at a Guinea soccer match, authorities say

Monitoring Desk
CONAKRY: Fifty-six people were killed and several injured in a stampede at a soccer stadium in southern Guinea, following clashes between fans, Guinea's government said Monday.

Authorities are conducting an investigation to establish those responsible for the stampede on Sunday, Communications Minister Fana Soumah said in a statement read on national television.

Among the victims are several children according to local media and a coalition of political parties.

The stampede broke out on Sunday afternoon at the stadium in the city of Nzerekore during the final of a local tournament between the Labe and Nzerekore teams in honor of Guinea's military leader, Mamadi Doumbouya, Guinea's Prime Minister Amadou

Oury Bah said on the X platform.

"During the stampede, victims were recorded," Bah said, without giving details. The regional authorities are working to restore calm in the area, he added.

Local media reported that security forces tried to use tear gas to restore calm after the chaos that followed a disputed penalty.

"This (the disputed penalty) angered supporters who threw stones. This is how the security services used tear gas," Media Guinea, a local news website, reported. It said several of those killed were children while some of the injured being treated at a regional hospital are in critical condition.

Videos that appeared to be from the scene showed fans in a section of the stadium shouting and protesting the refereeing before clashes broke out as people poured onto the field.

People were running as they tried to escape from the stadium, many of them jumping the high fence.

Videos also showed many people lying on the floor in what looked like a hospital as a crowd gathered nearby, some assisting the wounded.

The National Alliance for Alternation and Democracy opposition coalition called for an investigation. It said the tournament was organized to drum up support for the "illegal and inappropriate" political ambitions of the military leader. Guinea has been led by the military since soldiers ousted President Alpha Conde in 2021. It is one of a growing number of West African countries, including Mali, Niger and Burkina Faso, where the military has taken power and delayed a return to civilian rule.

ICC collected more evidence in last 18 months than it has in past 20 years, says chief prosecutor

Monitoring Desk
THE HAGUE: The International Criminal Court (ICC) has collected more evidence and information in the past 18 months than it has in the 20 years since it was founded, its chief prosecutor said on Monday.

Karim Khan emphasized the court's recent intensified efforts during his address at the 23rd session of the Assembly of States Parties (ASP) to the ICC's Rome Statute.

The ICC has received the most evidence and documents in its history in the last year, with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and victims submitting a large number of documents and evidence under Article 15 of the Rome Statute, he noted.

Of the 30 arrest warrants issued by the court, the chief prosecutor said 18 were issued within the last three years.

Stressing that the law must be applied equally to everyone, Khan said the protection that people on one side of the world enjoy is no different than that on the other.

Monitoring Desk
FENGAL: The death toll from Cyclone Fengal's fierce push through Sri Lanka and southern India reached 20 on Monday as downpours and flooding followed the storm's wake after its winds calmed.

Fengal made landfall in India's Tamil Nadu state on Saturday, bringing the highest 24-hour rainfall seen in 30 years to nearby Pudukcherry, before weakening to a normal low-pressure weather system by Monday morning. More deaths were reported in Sri Lanka after Fengal skirted the island nation on Friday bringing intense rains that triggered landslides. Sri Lanka's disaster management agency said a total of 17 people had been killed in the country while nearly 470,000 others were taking shelter in temporary relief camps. ## Zelenskyy says Ukraine wants to retake territory under Russian control through diplomacy

ISTANBUL: Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy on Monday said Kyiv wants to retake its territory currently under Russia's control through diplomatic means.

"Our army lacks the strength to take back some territories, like Crimea. That is true. We do have to find diplomatic solutions," Zelenskyy said in an interview with Japan's Kyodo News.

He said a diplomatic solution to the issue can only be considered when Kyiv knows it is "strong enough" to prevent any further military actions by Russia.

Reiterating that support from partners for Kyiv is "not enough," Zelenskyy urged NATO to invite his country for membership talks as soon as possible.

He said the war that started in 2022 has entered a "complicated period," claiming about 12,000 North Korean soldiers have been deployed to Russia's border region of Kursk, which Ukraine invaded in August.

He argued it is "indisputable" that Russian President Vladimir Putin will use the North Korean soldiers as "cannon fodder" to reduce its own losses.

The Ukrainian president said he has information about casualties among North Korean soldiers on the front line, but did not provide specific numbers.

He said US President-elect Donald Trump and his incoming administration are aware of Ukraine's position and "victory plan," and that his team is studying the contents of the plan.

French claim of ICC immunity for Netanyahu has no legal basis: Ex-Greek foreign minister

Monitoring Desk
ATHENS: In the wake of international arrest warrants issued for Israel's prime minister and former defense chief, France joined a handful of countries saying they will not uphold the decision should the accused enter its territory.

Despite initially vowing to "adhere to its international legal obligations" after the International Criminal Court (ICC) warrants were issued more than a year into the country's genocidal war on Gaza, France's Foreign Ministry said last week that Benjamin Netanyahu and Yoav Gallant had immunity to the court's decision. However, according to a former Greek foreign minister, France must backtrack on its position again, as it contradicts legal principles.

George Katrougalos, who is also a professor of international law, noted that the French government's reasoning is based on the fact that Israel is not a party to the ICC's founding document, the Rome Statute, and this makes Netanyahu and Gallant immune to the court's order for their arrest. "We have not heard something like that from France when Russian President Putin has been indicted with an arrest warrant against him by the very International Criminal Court," Katrougalos told Anadolu. Russia, like Israel, is not a signatory of the Rome Statute. He emphasized that article 27 of the statute clearly states that there is no immunity for heads of state or government who are indicted or sentenced by the ICC, adding, "Exactly that was the mission of the ICC. Bringing heads of government, strong people, who have committed crimes, to justice."

On the potential legal consequences for states that do not comply with ICC decisions, Katrougalos warned that failing to implement such decisions would violate international law.

"If the cease-fire line means that Russia contin-

Lifting ban on PIA in Europe is a significant achievement: Business Leader

KARACHI (INP): The Chairman of National Business Group Pakistan, the President of the Pakistan Businessmen and Intellectuals Forum, the President of All Karachi Industrial Alliance, the Chairman of the FPCCI Advisory Board, and the President and former provincial minister, Mian Zahid Hussain, said on Monday that the lifting of the four-year ban on the flights of Pakistan's national airline PIA in European countries is an excellent achievement.

He said the move would reduce the airline's losses, increasing its market value, which is encouraging.

Mian Zahid Hussain said that efforts should also be made to lift the ban imposed by the UK and the US, and action should be taken against the political swindlers who tried to destroy PIA for personal interests.

Otherwise, he warned that damaging national assets and interests for political benefit would continue.

Talking to the business community, the veteran business leader said that the ban on PIA in several countries, including Europe and America, was imposed to benefit a foreign airline whose head was a friend of the leader of a fanatic group in Pakistan.

For this purpose, the then Minister of Aviation made a statement in the National Assembly that the licenses of many pilots in PIA were fake, leading to a ban on the carrier.

The organization that checks airlines' safety and performance standards also pushed the PIA rating to the lowest level.

Later, the Islamabad High Court clarified that the Minister of Aviation's statement was wrong, but no action was taken against him for harming the national interests.

"Setting the Maximum Retail Price (MRP) at a flat rate per kilogram will disproportionately impact the lowest income groups in both urban and rural areas, equating their burden to that of higher-income groups," he warned. "This move will place an additional strain on lower and lower-middle-class households, who are already grappling with the severe effects of rising inflation on essential commodities," he added while exchanging views with members of PTA delegation during their visit to the Karachi Chamber of Commerce & Industry (KCCI).
